The Cow.

The dairy cow, if able to express herself in a way which the human family would comprehend, might well lay claim to being man's best friend. She might establish such a claim by calling attention to the fact that from her product and her carcass man manufactures more of the necessities of life than from any other similar source. She furnishes these necessities to him from infancy until such a time as temporal things are no longer associated with his existence, and she does it ungrudgingly and constantly.

In addition to contributing to man's necessity and his pleasure, the prosperity of an agricultural community is more closely identified with her than with any other of the domestic animals. The horse is quite essential in tilling the soil, but where necessity requires it the sturdy son of the cow can take his place as he has done in every agricultural section on earth. The horse can only furnish labor and can only return a profit to his owner when conditions are right for satisfactory grain crops.

It is a well known fact that the dairy cow is the salvation of the farmer in times of poor crops as she is able to convert the rough crops, which are never a total failure, into dairy products which always have a cash value. In addition to this she furnishes skim milk and buttermilk for the calves, pigs and poultry and fertility for the soil, without which the farm becomes less valuable each year and the whole country less prosperous.

The elimination of the dairy cow would necessitate an almost revolutionary readjustment of man's tastes and requirements. It would mean untold suffering and hardship. Of course she will not be dispensed with but her value can perhaps be best appreciated by contemplating such a loss. She will continue to be man's best friend as long as the human family exists and will keep on supplying him with his greatest needs just as she has done through all the ages.

The Success of the National Banking System.

It was fortunate for this nation that during its great trial it had Salmon P. Chase at the head of the Treasury Department to devise the financial means for carrying on the war. To Mr. Chase probably belongs the most credit for the establishment of the national banking system. He was a man of remarkable ability and intense patriotism. He had sound judgment and judicial temperament which enabled him to listen to arguments of financiers, weigh their strength, and decide what measures were wisest to adopt.

Great financiers, like great generals, are born, and not made by education. It is a notable fact that the greatest financier of the Revolutionary period was not Robert Morris, who had a life training, but Alexander Hamilton, an army officer, who had been General Washington's secretary and was but 23 years of age; and that the wisest financier of the Civil War was not James Gallatin, a banker from his youth, but Salmon P. Chase, a lawyer from Ohio.

In recommending the enactment of the National Banking Law he said: "It would be difficult to conceive of a note circulation which will combine higher local and general credit than this." Had he been a prophet in Israel he could not have predicted anything more true than the following: "After a few years no other bank circulation would be used, nor would the issues of the national circulation be easily increased beyond the legitimate demand of business. Every dollar of circulation would represent real capital actually invested in national stocks; and the total amount issued could be at all times easily and quickly ascertained from the books of the treasury."

Experience soon justified the wisdom of the National banking system. Only a little more than a year after the amended law was passed, 1,513 National banks had been established with an aggregate capital of nearly $396,000,000, and with more than $276,000,000 of United States bonds deposited with the treasurer to secure their notes circulating in the hands of the people everywhere, and at all times against any loss from broken banks.

A few National banks have failed, but no person ever lost a dollar by reason of having some of their notes on hand at the time of their failure. The purchase of so many government bonds by the banks not only assisted the government to the extent of their purchase, but strengthened the market, made the bonds popular and induced capitalists and people who had a little earnings to invest, to place it in government bonds. The banks having invested so much money in the government debt, became deeply interested in sustaining the government credit and at once became the agencies for the sale of the government securities. During the fiscal year of 1865, bonds to the amount of $335,266,617, were sold over the counters of the National banks.

Sunday School Convention.

The Forks and Overton Sunday School Association met in Convention at Overton on Wednesday, July 20. Two sessions were held and under the direction of District President O. S. Bender, no time was allowed to go to waste. Each subject on the program with the exception of one was promptly responded to in a manner that showed the speaker's interest in the work and brought inspiration to those permitted to hear them. The importance of bringing the children into the church was especially explained. The tendency to Sabbath desecration by base ball games etc. brought forth a spirited discussion by Rev. Hess and others and led to the appointment of a committee denouncing the same. The speakers on the program were Reverends Dodd, Hess, Sanford and LaRose, and Grace Packard, Willard Bender and E. R. Warburton.

Post Cards Like Blotters.

A news dispatch from Washington says: "Protests against the new postal cards are coming into the postoffice department from all over the country. The complaint is that the card-board on which they are printed is of such poor quality that it will not hold ink. Congress recently took the manufacture of postal cards from private contractors and ordered the work done by the government printing office. Public Printer Donnelly is turning out 3,000,000 a day." —Towanda Review.

Slain as He Slept In Hammock.

Former Mayor A. H. Bouseman, of Ridgeway, Va., was assassinated by means of a dynamite bomb, which was thrown from the street under a hammock in which he was lying.

No clue to the identity of the murderer or the cause of the crime has been found.

Mr. Bouseman had been spending the hot evening sleeping in a hammock swung between two trees on the lawn in front of his residence. Without a word of warning at about 10 o'clock the dynamite bomb was thrown by someone passing along the street. It landed in the hammock at his feet, and in an instant exploded. Bouseman's feet were torn away by the bursting shell, and his legs frightfully mutilated. In great agony he died an hour later.

Although the town authorities made every effort to discover the assassin, no clue could be found, and it is believed he escaped without being seen by any one. The news quickly spread about town and excitement grew to a high pitch.

As mayor of Ridgeway Mr. Bouseman presided over the police court of the town trying petty cases. It is thought that some person upon whom Bouseman in his court had passed sentence of punishment held a grudge against him and had been awaiting an opportunity to wreak vengeance on him. The opportunity came as Bouseman lay sleeping in the open air.

The terrific report attracted many persons to the scene, but the excitement was so great that apparently no one thought to search for the assassin until he had made his escape undetected.

"I should like," said a book canvasser to a merchant whose sanctum he had invaded, "to call your attention to a little work which I have here."
"And I will call your attention to a mighty mass of work which I have here," replied the man at the desk.
