The gathering night was filled with The gathering high was meet with the prophecies of the breaking storm. The first drops of sleet were already knocking sharply on the window panes; all about the solitary house the wind joined its moaning with the lamentation of the vast gray waters, and regularly over the collan accom-paniment of wind and wave came the long wails of the whistling buoy far down the bay. Damaris French set a brightly burning lamp on one of the kitchen window sills; it was a custom hon-ored by the generations of Frenches who had dwelt on that island in the bay, that on stormy nights a light should be kept burning to guide any man to haven who might be on the seething waves.

The girl stood looking down the The girl stood looking down the avenue of light into the vast grayness beyond, and her strong young face trembled with emotion, for in the quiet places of her heart there was a great sorrow that rang with the moaning of the waves. "I set my signal and he failed to come.

Through the long watches of the night before Damaris had fought with the grim thing that lay in her broth the grim thing that lay in her broth-er's lungs and protested at each breath that came in or went out, and when the morning had dawned it had seemed as if her strength were gone. Then Damaris had stood in the doorway and watched the rising sun tinge every wave with brightness, and looked over to the little village on the mainland where the roofs shone he mainland where the roofs shone white. Over in that village on the main land dwelt young Dr. Stickney. With the earnestness born of his love for Damaris he had come to the island day by day and wooed its fair young mistress with a quiet persistency that was full of latent strength. And when Damaris had gently tried to make him understand that his presence was superfluous to her happiness he would come back the next day and talk lobster catching with Lon. To satisfy his persistency she had made the concession of a promise that if ever she wanted him she would hoist a square white flag on her pole and he would come—whatever might be in the way he would come to her. And as she had watched the morning light dancing on the crests of the waves she had stretched out her hands as if something of the man's strength came to her across the wa-

"For Lon's sake I will call you, Marc Stickney," she cried, and 10 minutes later a square of white sall-cloth floated broad in the morning sunlight.

As she looked into the vast grayness of the coming night the sorrow of it filled her young heart; it was for Lon's sake she had waved that message to the strong man across the wa ters and he had not heeded her neces-sity. Now that the darkness and storm had come it was too late.

The girl was very weary, and now that Lon was better and sleeping quietly their was time for thought. It was a bitter thing that her call had Man's Lifeless Body Found by the Roadside. Dushore Review.

The dead body of George B. Camp was found lying in the snow on the mountain road, last Saturday, between Gabriel Bowman's and Harry Cadow's The body was taken to Lopez, and Deputy Coroner Lawrence Dunn empanneled a jury, J. P. McGee, D. W. Pealer, W. L. Johnson, R. G. Frutchey, C, A. Johnson and C. A. Raub. Finding no marks of violence on the body, the verdict was that Camp came to his death from causes unknown to the jury. Thomas Hunsinger of Colley, met Camp on the road on Friday afternoon and on Saturday found his body not far from where he met him on the previous day. It is thought that Camp was on his way to Jerry Hunsinger's where he frequently visits.

Camp was a man of better than 70 years of age. He leaves a wife in North Bend, Clinton County, two sons at Nordmont, this county and five other sons and one daughter at North Bend, as follows: Guy J., Boyd B., Lloyd L., William H., Ray L., Lee C., George H. and Maud.

Splendid Article. The venerable J. Washington Ingham of Sugar Run, father of George T. Ingham of Towanda, in a recent number of the Country Gentleman, contributed two very interesting articles, one on "A Pes simistic Prophet," and the other on "Winter Dairying Preferred." Mr. Ingham, in spite of his 87 years, writes as fluently and as brilliantly as ever .- Towanda Review.

The readers of the News Item have had the pleasure of reading several articles from the versatile pen of Mr. Ingham, he having contributed to this paper for the past few months under the pseudonym of "Castelar," some interesting articles on topics of the day. Mr. Ingham is visiting friends
