R. L. WISHART, Teacher.

Dr. Beumbaugh, an educator whose opinion before county institutes on school topics carries influence, has been talking this week to the teachers of Delaware county. One of the discouraging observations that he made was this: That no young woman can successfully run her school and a beau at the same time. Not for many a day was there as much agitation created among the schoolmarms as there was over this brief declaration.—Philadelphia Press.

From reports, the apple crop all over the State is unusually small. This is evidenced by the efforts to buy up the apples in this country at this time. Bedford has a very large crop of winter apples. We know farmers who have from 1,000 to 4,000 bushels in this county. Very many farmers have from 100 to 500 bushels. Bedford county's apple crop will bring more than $50,000 into this county. If sold at what apples will bring before the holidays.—Bedford Gazette.

One of the boldest instances of thieving occurred at the home of James W. Craig, at the Tonoloway Baptist church. Last Tuesday morning, in broad daylight, while Mr. Craig was at the barn doing the milking, some person or persons sneaked into the cellar and stole all the meat of a hog Mr. Craig had butchered a day or two before, and also about two bushels of potatoes. We sympathize with Mr. Craig, not only for the loss, but for the inconvenience to which he and his family were placed. They had a lot of saw mill men boarding there, and you had might as well try to appease the appetite of a circular saw with pine brush, as that of a hungry saw mill man without meat or potatoes. So James had nothing else to do but start out and never stop until the loss to the larder was replenished. The good people of the community can not understand why such crimes must go unpunished.

EARLY EXPOSITION EXPERIENCES

Great Success of the Opening—The Attendance Gratifying—Nearly Ten Miles of Exhibits—After an American Made Palace.

Philadelphia, Sept. 19.—The first three days of the National Export exposition have given the enterprise an immense impetus. The fact that 30,000 persons visited the grounds and buildings on the day of the opening ceremonies and that they carried away with them the most favorable impressions of the day has been highly gratifying to the managers.

A combination of favorable circumstances conspired to give eclat to the inaugural exercises. The day was beautiful and bracing, the great Auditorium proved to be equal to all expectations, and the spectators who assembled in it were more than cordial; they were enthusiastic.

The hall and its audience was a reminder of some of our great national political conventions, particularly, it has been remarked, of that memorable one held in Chicago 15 years ago which nominated Blaine in the Exposition Hall in Chicago, but in many respects it was much more striking. While the decorations of the hall were of the simplest character, the great audience itself gave plenty of color to the scene. Some one remarked, "There are many women here and a sprinkling of men." As a matter of fact, the audience was composed of about an equal number of each sex, and it was this circumstance which enlivened the scene and lent to it a delightful charm of color shading. The proceedings were interesting throughout, and the music was superb. The personal participation of the president by telegraph, from his desk in the White House, gave completeness to the event.

Since the opening the attendance has been more satisfactory than was anticipated, all of the circumstances considered. Falling from 23,000 to about 9,000 on Friday, it increased to 15,000 on Saturday. This shows a healthy interest at the very beginning of the exposition, and indicates a large enough interest in the future to meet the hopes of the most sanguine friends of the exposition.

Visitors have been surprised at the number and interesting character of the exhibits, notwithstanding the astonishingly brief time in which they have been arranged. The magnitude of the buildings and the economy and wisdom with which the space has been utilized has also been a matter of remark. For instance, in the Main building there is a length of main aisles of over 11,000 feet and a length in the cross aisles of 14,000 feet, so that one who has walked through all of the aisles of the Main building will have completed a journey of about five miles. In the other buildings of the exposition there are more than four miles of aisles, and thus to obtain even a glimpse of everything in the exposition grounds the visitor must walk nearly ten miles. As all of these aisles are lined with a succession of all that is best and most interesting in American manufactures, from those of the most trifling character to those of the greatest magnitude and importance, some idea of what an interesting collection in both variety and character is to be gleaned from these figures. The exposition is proving to be a popular one in the limited sense of that expression. It has proved interesting to the merely curious, those who give but a passing thought to what they see, as well as to those who seek information and instruction. This was somewhat strikingly shown in the vasty different visitors to the exposition during the week, the one a lady looking for a patented needle in a sewing machine, the other an official visitor from Japan hunting for a place for the emperor, which he desires to build at Tokio. This statement should not be regarded as a forced comparison. The Japanese commissioner is a real personage, and he is an architect now in this country arranging for the construction of a steel skeleton framework for the imperial structure, which is to be an earthquake proof building, and is not the first of its kind to be erected in this country, but will be the first to be constructed of American steel. Such incidents go far to show the importance and value of the exposition.
