Orbisonia Dispatch

Helen, the four year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Barron, of Rock hill, was so badly burned Monday morning that death relieved her sufferings the same night. The child was in the upper part of the house and secured some matches, with which it was playing, setting fire to its clothing and when discovered, was all in a mass of flames. Dr. Bush was summoned and did all in his power to relieve the child's sufferings.

Shippensburg Chronicle.

Young girls who think it great sport to enter into a correspondence with a stranger through correspondence bureaus, should take warning from the experience of a young Chambersburg girl, who recently had to invoke the aid of the police authorities to get rid of an unwelcome suitor, whom she had gained through correspondence. When the man appeared in Chambersburg, he had the appearance of an ordinary tramp and he annoyed the girl so that she was thoroughly frightened and was forced to tell her story to the police. The man was arrested and given a hearing and was then ordered to leave town under threat of being jailed if he returned.

FORT LITTLETON.

The "outside world" is inclined toward poking fun at Fulton county for not having a railroad; but there are many other desirable things in life besides railroads. Our highways and byways are not lined with hoboes, and our county jail is not filled with tramps and other criminals; and I might add just here-and I do not do it to advertise buckwheat flour, for my last crop has been all marketed long agothat there is something about the diet of buckwheat cakes that is conducive to a healthy development of morality and religion. SHIPWRECK.

A Little Girl and Boy Who Were Not Afraid

A few days ago the steamship Georglan landed at New York with two little tots on board who think there is no better fun in the world than being shipwrecked. They are Louis and Edward Stange, and their papa was the captain of the German steamshin Ella, which was wrecked 450 miles out in the Atlantic Ocean 15 days ago. The little girl is 6 years old and the little boy only 4, but they have passed the most of their lives on the sea with their papa and mamma and nurse, who were all with them this time. They were not a bit afraid when the gale began to sing through the shrouds and ratlines; it is music they have always loved to hear. Up and down plunged the ship in the fierce storm, and at last a giant wave broke in the main hatch cover, and the water rushed in, almost standing the ship on end, Captain Stange, who was on deck, was thrown down and had his lip split and his head and face injured. Then he happened to think this was a pretty stiff blow for two little ones to be up romping around in, so he went down and put them to bed, nailing prattling cheerfully in German. Once in a while they were taken out of their berths to rest during the next five days, but they had early learned to mind without making a fuss about it, and they stood it bravely. At last the captain saw the steamer Georgian's lights and sent up rockets. A lifeboat was despatched. It came back broken by the waves without having reached the Ella. The Georgian stayed near, though, till daylight, and then another lifeboat was sent out and this time it reached to within 60 fect of the Ella. The lifeboat crew did not dare go any nearer to the against the sides of the big ship, but wrecked steamer for fear their frail boat would be pounded to pieces against the sides of the big ship, but Captain Strange threw the end of a rope out to the lifeboat. The rope was caught and the other end was looped under the arms of a big sallor; then little Edward was lashed to the sailor's back with his head a foot above the seaman's shoulders. Edward looked up and laughed at his mamma as the sailor jumped into the tossing sea, and in a moment a little bobbing head now and then was all that could be seen of Edward. He got a good duck ing, but he came up smilling and reached the lifeboat safely, Louise was taken from the ship in the same way, on the back of a sallor, and she, too, seemed to think it was fun, and laughed as if she would like to try it again. The nurse was not so brave After the rope was tied around her and a life preserver was fastened upon her she stood and had to be pushed into the water as she would not jump. Their mamma came through bravely and after all the crew had been saved, their papa like a good seacaptain, the last to leave the ship, was also taken aboard the lifeboat, and they all were saved. Not a hit too soon, though, for they had scarcely all been made com fortable on the Georgian when the Ella's stern rose up, and she plung d headlirst to the bottom of the sea like big whale. The children clapped their hands when they saw this. They thought it was a great show, but their papa did not think so as he saw his

The Other World.

It lies around us like a cloud The world we do not see; Yet the sweet closing of an eye May bring us there to be.

Its gentle breezes fan our checks Amid our worldly cares; Its gentle voices whisper love And mingle with our pravers.

Sweet hearts around us throb and beat.

Sweet helping hands are stirred. And palpitates the veil between With beatings almost heard.

The silence-awful, sweet and calm-They have no power to break: For mortal words are not for them To utter or partake.

So thin, so soft, so sweet they glide, So near to press they seem; They lull us gently to our rest. They melt into our dream

And in the hush of rest they bring. "Tis easy now to see How lovely and how sweet a pass The hour of death may be.

To close the eye and close the ear, Wrapt in a trance of bliss, And gently drawn in loving arms, To swcon from that to this Scarce knowing if we wake or sleep, Scarce asking where we are, To feel all evil sink away, All sorrow and all care

Sweet souls around us watch us still. Press nearer to our side. into our thoughts, into our prayers, With gentle helping glide.

Let death between us be as naught, A dried and vanquished stream; Your joy be the reality, Our suffering life the dream

The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof; the world and they that dwell therein.
