

THE HORRORS PARTY.

"He's got out regular printed invitations," said Bob, contemptuously. "Jack Dillon did 'em."

"Well, what if he did?" retorted Lida. "They're nice. Can't Jack do better?"

"What's yours, Lida? Look quick and see," said Bob, when Lida, still holding the pan of clean shining dishes in her lap, began to relate some of the amusing incidents of the party of horrors.

"Humph," said Bob. "That's good. I wonder what she'd give me?" "Oh, I know," said Lida, quickly. "Season your wood in the warm air of affection for mother, sharpen your ax on the grindstone of perseverance, and your kindlings will split like Dresden china."

"Well," said Bob, "that party of horrors has been a success, after all, if it can make you talk like that."—Chicago Record.

A Bright Boy's Work.

Wallace Evans, of Philadelphia, a slender thirteen-year-old lad in knickerbockers, owns the largest pheasantry in the West, selling 800 eggs in a season, and hatching nearly as many birds.

Such an enterprise conducted by a boy is generally a makeshift, but the Evans pheasantry is perfect in construction, having about 775 by 200 feet under wire, with the latest improved latcher and houses. It is divided into a network of special yards, every gate closing and locking automatically, so there is no danger of the birds escaping.

The flock of gold pheasants is a gorgeous sight, with their brilliant yellow heads, capes of orange and blue, lined with vivid green, scarlet bodies, burnished wings and long, graceful tails, dotted with black. They are a fad among fanciers, and their price is increasing, as they now bring $30 a pair.

who despised gardening could not and weod to their heart's content. Notwithstanding the disagreeable character of these miscellaneous tasks the little beehive rang with the laughter and jests of the workers. The hilarity reached a climax when the horrors having been performed, the girls were invited to sit down to the dining luncheon prepared for them.

"This little party," explained Mrs. Wells, when all were seated and grief had been said, "was gotten up not so much that you might relieve yourselves by airing your grievances, but that we might devise some plan of lightening your burdens. At each girl's plate there is an envelope containing a written recipe which I hope will cure the distasteful features of the work she most dislikes. These recipes have been placed since you came, and each I think applies to the individual case in question. I prefer that you do not open them until you get home."
