

Orgies in China. The Fulton County News has hitherto commented on the somewhat detailed reports of looting and rapine by Chinese troops in China. We have with some hesitation, being not to accept too hastily the reports, and preferring to give to the foreign troops the benefit of all possibilities that the news was untrue or that the facts were committed by Chinese outlaws. Day by day, however, the reports are renewed, the latest news on the subject sent out from Taku by the Associated Press, is worse than that had gone before. Unless we are to indict the correspondents and his informants with simulated lying, and of lying in their own interests, we must conclude that one of the most abominable crimes of the century is being committed by those whose ostensible and professed purpose is to repress and prevent crime.

A Newburg (N. Y.) special (August 27) runs: At Warwick, Orange county, to-morrow will be tried a suit the like of which has never been seen in the world perhaps. The parties to the suit are two brothers, W. H. Utter and J. W. Utter, and they live in the village of Amity on neighboring places. The plaintiff, W. H., has about 4000 peach trees. The defendant, J. W., is a well-known producer of honey. The suit will be tried before Justice Stago in Warwick. The plaintiff alleges that his brother's bees are damaging his ripening fruit by stinging, sapping and boring the peaches so that they are rotting and fast becoming of no value to him. His methods of proving this alleged fact are as novel as the suit itself. He has taken great pains to obtain the evidence by which he can prove his case. He has had not only to obtain evidence that the bees have damaged his maturing peaches, but also to prove that his orchards have been visited by bees from the great bee colonies of his brother. The bees are first detected extracting the juice from the peaches. Mr. Utter then approaches the busy insect with a wire gauze trap which he claps over the bee and the peach at the same time. Making sure of his little prisoner he removes it to a box prepared with glass on one side, a movable lid hinged fast and buttoned and a trap door through which he drops the bees. The most ingenious arrangement follows. The box is supplied with a flat dish of honey from which the bees help themselves freely. When they have regaled themselves to their satisfaction they naturally look for a place of exit. In doing this they crawl over a liberal sprinkling of flower on the bottom of the box and of course become covered with the flower which sticks to them. When thoroughly coated they are released and they usually make straight for their hives. They appear like a flock of white millers flying through the air and are thus easily traced in their homeward flight.

These reports be true, the bees themselves constitute a dire and one of the most abominable crimes of the century. How dreadful it is we may judge best estimate by thinking what would be our feelings if Chinese were thus treating Americans. How we should rage against the "yellow devils!" But even then that is the crime of the most civilization, the reproach brought upon the interfering Powers, the barrier that stood against the amicable mingling of China to free intercourse with the rest of the world.

A Young Man's Brutality.

The following dispatch appeared in the evening papers of Monday. READING, Pa. Sept. 3.—John McKinney, a young man of Lebanon county, was arrested charged with an extraordinary offence. McKinney had been reading a story of college life, in which athletic sports played a prominent part.

He was greatly impressed with a description in the story of a tug of war between the freshmen and sophomores. In passing a field in which there was a number of cattle grazing, McKinney was struck with the idea that a tug of war between two cows would, to say the least, be a novel test of strength. He went into the field and succeeded in tying together the tails of two of the cattle.

Then McKinney urged the cows to pull in opposite directions, and they tugged so well and hard that the tail of one of the cows was completely torn from its socket and the tail of the other almost severed from its body. Reference has been made in these columns to the brutality of mobs in New Orleans, New York City, Akron, Ohio, and near Canton, in this State. But the savage nature of the Lebanon county young man is hard indeed to comprehend. It is fortunate that his like does not prevail in every community.

Lebanon county is the home of General J. P. S. Gobin, Lieutenant Governor of Pennsylvania, and commander of the Third Brigade National Guard. Ought not his righteous soul to rise up in indignation at the conduct of this young man, and should he not insist that condign punishment be meted out to him?

"Freddy," said a mother to her precocious 4-year-old son, "the doctor says it was that little bit of candy you ate last night that made you sick." "Well," answered Freddy, "it was my fault. I asked you to give me a whole lot."
