Court came and went—as usual—in a jiffy. The grand jury only had one small case before them and were discharged the same afternoon they were called. The petit jury did not have a case. Under ordinary conditions, one jury a year would answer every purpose; and then there would not be business enough to worry them, or keep them away from home over Sunday. We will give you the proceedings next week.

Pratt, Md.
Mr. Editor: Rev. A. R. Griland of near Pratt, Md., was requested to present himself at the hospitable home of Mr. Phil. Boden, of the lower end of Fulton county on the 12 inst. to join Mr. Boden and Miss Jessie Smith in the holy bonds of matrimony. The ceremony was to take place at 2 o'clock P. M., and as Phil lived on one side of Sidelinghill Creek, and Miss Jessie on the other and no way to cross with horse and buggy, Phil was compelled to drive to the pike, follow it east to Swain's Mill, then cross and up high Germany into Fulton county and when in Fulton, was farther from the home of his intended than when he left home. When Phil arrived, he found the bride in readiness—waiting and wondering where Phil was—all the time knowing of the turbulent waters that rolled between them. But nothing was to stand between Phil and his chance of getting a wife; so they were soon on their journey back to Maryland, by the same route Phil had come. When they arrived, they found the Rev. in readiness to perform his part. He was somewhat nervous on account of the delay, as it was then 6 o'clock instead of the hour set. Now, Mr. Editor, you see the above occurrence is no fault of Phil's, the Rev's, nor the people in the lower end of the county as they have repeatedly asked the county to put a bridge across the creek near this point. What a pity for Phil that there was no bridge for him. I think the welfare of the people living south of Sideling Hill creek should be considered.

"Philippine Island canary birds" are the latest form of swindle to be worked on the unsuspecting and gullible public. In the majority of cases the swindle is worked by young men who represent themselves as having lately been discharged from the army after having served in the Philippines, and present a pitiful tale of having to reach a sick relative, and being compelled to part with their treasured mementoes brought from Manila. The rogues are plausible talkers, and generally work on the compassion of the women at their homes during the hours when no men are supposed to be about. They carry the birds in a small wooden cage, and it generally happens that the first time the supposed yellow songster takes a bath it washes off the yellow dye with which it has been treated and emerges as an ordinary sparrow with no musical gifts whatever. Better go a little slow in doing business with strangers.

When the President goes on his tour to the Pacific coast, he will take with him a sufficient force of clerks and telegraphers to attend to all the public business that may demand his attention, and will be in constant touch with his office in Washington by telegraph and telephone. Such are the facilities of modern travel that this can be done with a minimum of inconvenience and at comparatively slight expense, while the public business will be attended to almost, if not quite, as well as if the President were daily in his office. Whatever inconvenience there may be about the scheme is more than compensated by the advantage of having the President visit distant sections of the country and become personally acquainted with their conditions, needs and opinions.

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Stevens, of Fort Littleton, are the happiest people in that neck o' the woods; and it's all on account of the arrival of a brand new baby boy. It has been sixteen years since any little joys of that kind found their way into that home.
