Anecdote of Jackson.

Former Governor Peter Turney of Tennessee, had a peculiar experience with General, Stonewall Jackson. It was in Virginia, of course, Colonel Turney had never seen the general, but about midnight received orders to prepare three day's rations and be ready to move at a moment's notice. Two hours later came an order to proceed in a certain direction, and that on a certain point on the road he would find a guide. At the point a citizen rode up and merely indicating the direction rode along with the colonel in silence. Before day they came upon a plain-looking man wearing a small cap and mounted on a little pony. He fell in with the head of the column and along they rode, still in silence. Soon after daybreak the newcomer said: "Colonel, had you not better halt your men for breakfast?"

"I will before long," was the reply. The silence was only broken half an hour later by a similar suggestion and a similar reply. Finally the newcomer stopped glancing around at the sky and landscape, said: "Colonel, halt your men for breakfast."

Colonel Turney, thinking that this was a plain countryman who felt sorry for the men, did so. When the march was resumed the stranger remarked that the regiment was straggling a good deal, and when Colonel Turney gave a command for the column to "short step," the stranger said: "No, that will throw your men all out. It should be slow step." This was a command to which the Tennesseans were not accustomed, and, putting a private on his pony, the stranger took the head of the column on foot and showed the men how to march.

While this was going on Colonel Turney asked his adjutant who the stranger was, and when the reply came "Stonewall Jackson," you could have bought the colonel for a nickel.

He was on foot, the very head man, in such close proximity to the enemy that the bullets were on in half an hour, and yet teaching the soldiers how to march.

By this night movement he flanked the enemy and the Tennessee regiment struck in front, making a complete route for the enemy.

The negro population of the United States is not diminishing, as many suppose, but increases. The percentage of increase since 1880, according to the census of 1900, is 13.78, or more than in the previous decade. The figures, according to the latest census, are: Colored population, 8,500,000; increase, 1,029,960. This is the largest increase shown by any census since 1790, excepting that of 1880, when the gain was 1,700,784.

Limberger cheese, says an exchange, if laid in a cupboard or refrigerator will drive away ants. We don't doubt it. Limberger cheese will do even more. It will drive a spike through a wire fence. A small piece of cheese properly warmed up will dismiss a congregation quicker than a fire. Yes, sir; there is no doubt about it. Limberger cheese will drive away your ants, your uncles, your cousins and your mother-in-law.

"I am indebted to One Minute Cough Cure for my present good health and my life. I was treated in vain by doctors for lung trouble following lagrippe. I took One Minute Cough Cure and recovered my health." Mr. E. H. Wise, Madison, Ga. Trout's drug store.

Mr. Samuel Ruff, one of the oldest citizens of Penn. Westmoreland county, has a recipe for the cure of peach trees which he says every grower of the delicious fruit should know. Mr. Ruff says the greatest enemy the peach tree has is a worm that destroys the roots. A bushel of coal scattered around the tree will prevent this. The sulphur in the coal penetrates, to the worms. The remedy is a simple one and Mr. Ruff will vouch for its efficacy.

"I wish to truthfully state to you and the readers of these few lines that your Kodol Dyspepsia Cure is without question, the best and only cure for dyspepsia that I have ever come in contact with and I have used many other preparations." John Beam, West Middlesex, Pa. No preparation equals Kodol Dyspepsia Cure as it contains all the natural digestants. It will digest all kinds of food and can't help but do you good. Human Life Longer.

The opinion of American life insurance men that the average length of human life is increasing has been sustained by the results of eight years work by the actuaries of England and Scotland. These actuaries have just completed an examination of the mortality records of more than 600,000 persons, and they affirm that the increase is both notable and steady. This is the natural and inevitable effect of several causes, the chief of which, perhaps, is the birth and development of sanitary science, by which the spread of diseases has been checked. It is beyond all doubt, too, that people pay more attention than formerly to the laws of personal hygiene. In every way they regulate their lives more rationally, owing to the wider extension of education and the more exact knowledge of the effect of neglect. Labor-saving machinery has relieved men of the hardest toil, and children and women are prevented by law from working an excessive number of hours in factories. That intemperance has greatly diminished is obvious, and people are better fed, clothed and housed than at any other time in the history of the race.

The lengthening of human life by the addition of a few years at the end—the prolonging of the helplessness and pains of mindless old age—could hardly be regarded as a blessing. The increase in the average length of life means something better than this. Old age as well as death has been pushed farther away. Youth lasts longer than formerly. As recently as a century ago it was common for girls of sixteen to become wives, while the young woman of twenty-five who was still unmarried was regarded as well within the borders of confirmed spinsterhood. It is probable that now more young women are married at twenty-five than at twenty. Men are now in the zenith of their powers between forty and fifty, and a man of sixty is no longer old. The proportion who pass the limit of life fixed by the Psalmist in good health, and with no apparent decline of intellectual vigor, is greater than ever.

It is true that this assertion is contrary to certain records which have come down to us from the Sixteenth and Seventeenth centuries, and which affirm that persons were known to have lived as long as 175 years, and in one instance 200 years. The ancient records, however, are not treated with any show of respect by men of science. The most thorough investigations have revealed that in no case had there been any evidence that a single person had ever lived to be 110 years old. Besides having the period of physical and mental vigor prolonged, the people of this age are able to employ agencies which diminish the time required to do things and the distance which it has been necessary to travel in order to enjoy certain experiences. On the whole, we have every reason to feel that we have unprecedented opportunity to make life full and profitable.

White Man Turned Yellow.

Great consternation was felt by the friends of M. A. Hogarty of Lexington, Ky., when they saw he was turning yellow. His skin slowly changed color, also his eyes, and he suffered terribly. His malady was Yellow Jaundice. He was treated by the best doctors, but without benefit. Then he was advised to try Electric Bitters, the wonderful Stomach and Liver remedy, and he writes: "After taking two bottles I was wholly cured." A trial proves its matchless merit for all Stomach, Liver and Kidney troubles. Only 50c. Sold by W. S. Dickson, Druggist.

A corn doctor is said to have swindled the people of Irwin and neighboring towns. He sells what is termed "Moore's Ointment," warranted to cure the worst kind of a corn in a few hours. He reaped a harvest in the coal town, it is said. The salve is nothing more than axle grease obtained at the various stores and wagon-making shops. The fakir has his pockets filled with small tin boxes labeled "Moore's Ointment." These boxes he has filled with axle grease which he sells at fifty cents and $1, according to the size.

Devotion.

We succeed in this world only by being devoted to something. In business, we must make ourselves our idol. The artist must worship at the shrine of art. We must all be content to become satellites before we become stars. Devotion to principle is what constitutes character. We must love and admire something. Haughty self-importance never accomplished anything great. To serve is the thing, and to be true and steadfast. In politics, the man who admires nobody, follows nobody and is suspicious of everybody, never succeeds. "We need not fear excessive influence," says Emerson. "A more generous trust is permitted. Serve the great. Stick at no humiliation. Grudge no office thou canst render. Be the limb of their body, the breath of their mouth. Compromise thy egotism. Who cares for that, so thou gain aught wider and nobler? Never mind the taunt of Boswellism; the devotion may easily be greater than the wretched pride which is guarding its own skirts. Be another; not thyself, but a Platonist not a soul, but a Christian; not a poet, but a Shakespearian."

But there is such a tendency in human nature to be self-sufficient, to be envious and self-willed that only a few become worshippers, and hence do not develop. Love is the foundation of all greatness as well as all virtue.

The narrow, back-biting, cynical tribe who scratch and tear like a wildcat at whatever approaches—who are full of suspicion and prejudice, and admire, nothing are necessarily destined to remain little. A genuine appreciation of merit is in its one of the greatest merits.

Never mind hating anything. That which is hateful and deformed is so common that to dwell upon it would only render us hateful and deformed without helping to render more potent the influence of that which is beautiful and good.

The best Christian is the greatest admirer and humblest follower of Christ. The greatest poet is most enthusiastic over the beauties of Shakespear. The greatest artist has the most appreciation of Raphael and Michael Angelo.

The great captain admires the Alexanders and Napoleons, and the great statesman places the names of the founders of republics and empires, the great leaders and organizers of men, at the pinnacle of human glory.

It is all a matter of love, the power that forms everything to symmetry and beauty, and which alone can redeem the world.

You can never cure dyspepsia by dieting. What your body needs is plenty of good food properly digested. Then if your stomach will not digest it, Kodol Dyspepsia Cure will. It contains all of the natural digestants hence must digest every class of food and so prepare it that nature can use it in nourishing the body and replacing the wasted tissues, thus giving life, health, strength, ambition, pure blood and good healthy appetite. Trout's drug store.

William Reese, living near Millington, West Virginia, met with a remarkable accident in harvesting. He was riding on a self-binder when the machine overturned a hive of bees. The bees swarmed out and began to sting the team and driver. Reese was trying to unhitch when one of the horses in its agony grabbed him by the leg and held on until farm hands came to his assistance and pried the animal's jaws open with a stick of wood. A physician was summoned, who found that a bone had been crushed. Reese is not expected to live. The horse which inflicted the injury soon died from the bee stings.
