

CONDENSED STORIES.

How Mme. Eames Rebuked Two Rich English Ladies.

Many think that musical artists should present their services for concerts given for charitable objects.

Mme. Eames is also of this opinion, but she recently in London put the matter in a new light to those who invited her to appear gratuitously.

Mme. Eames was one afternoon at Lord Charles Beresford's, and the next day received a letter from Lady Beresford saying that two ladies present had wanted to ask her a favor, but in her presence had lost courage.

"But I am not afraid of you," wrote Lady Beresford, and proceeded to say that the ladies in question, who happened to be extremely wealthy, wished her to sing for nothing for a certain charity.

Mme. Eames immediately sat down and wrote a reply. It was her duty, she said, to save herself as much as possible for her operatic performances at Covent Garden, which were stipulated by contract to be two days apart so that she might give her freshest and best to the public.

They find that it pours out the pearls which form the pearl. The shell of the pearl oyster is lined with a beautiful substance called mother of pearl.

As yet no replies from "the ladies interested" have been received. But Lady Beresford, not being one of the "interested ladies," appreciates more fully the humor of the situation.—Saturday Evening Post.

Handicapped by Her Name.

The point of view which one expects to be peculiar to the man of figures was demonstrated in a small way recently by Henry Clews.

"What is your first name?" he asked as he was about to inscribe the book to her. Now, her name was not one to be expected of a hardworking woman, and she was a hardworking woman.

"My name is Berenice," she said. The name does as well as another, for hers was just as bad.

"Heavens!" said Clews. "Would you call yourself that if you had it to do over again? It's of no use for you to work. You'll never make any money."

Not Familiar With His Rank.

"Cardinal Gibbons was formerly a frequent visitor to Cape May," said a visitor who just returned from that resort to a representative of a New York newspaper.

"Oh, I know what ails 'em—catnip. That big lion there acts just like my old cat Tabbie does when I give her catnip."

And, sure enough, she was right. Director John W. Smith had tried an experiment. A bundle of fresh catnip was thrown into each cage occupied by members of the cat family, and the effect was electrical.

The Siberian tiger was the only one who took no interest in the catnip.

FOR THE LITTLE ONES.

The Oyster In Its House at the Bottom of the Sea.

All the summer the oyster is busy laying eggs. It lays an almost incredible number. One oyster will lay 2,000,000 in a single season.

It keeps them for a time hidden in its mantle. The young oysters swim about in the water. They have a swimming apparatus like a band covered with what looks like hair, called cilia, that keep moving and row the little creatures about.

At first the young oysters keep near their mother, and at the least danger hide themselves in her shell, but by and by they fix themselves to some solid body and begin to make their shells. In three years' time they are fully grown.

It is thought that the oyster throws out the pearls in a moment of irritation caused by the entrance of some tiny substance, such as even a bit of sand, into its shell.

The Chinese, who are very ingenious, can make artificial pearls. They put atoms of grit or glass into the oyster's shell and watch to see what the creature will do.

It cannot turn out its enemy, so it does its best to conceal it.

What's the matter with my hat? Whenever I go walking Everybody stops and looks And then begins a-talking.

Fed the Lions Catnip. Out at the Central park zoo, in New York, the other day they tried an odd experiment.

A professor of natural history from Columbia or Yale, who was looking over the collection of animals, stood transfixed with wonder.

"Oh, I know what ails 'em—catnip. That big lion there acts just like my old cat Tabbie does when I give her catnip."
