In Death's Head Valley

By ANDREW BROSON

When Jessie's father, Simon gilvie, acquired his coffee estate on e summit of Santa Nita, Combia, South America, in the cenral Andes, he knew little of the imate he was about to face, and assie knew less. But he was a rave man and "faced the music" avly and made a lot of money, tile Jessie seemed to find nighte thunderstorm and days of steamy ent agree with her perfectly. "He is so tame," she would say to

"He's a good deal of a man for all that," her father would reply, with a quiet smile.

Twice under the cover of larkness had Pedro sought Fernanlo's life with his glittering forest one way or the other." knife. Thrice had Fernando hissed an awful vow straight into Pedro's face that the day he (Pedro) won the love of Jessie would be his last! They watched her wherever she Did she appear on the doorstep of her father's wooden house they would spring from behind trees and help her into her saddle. Did she come climbing up the mountain with water from the well, they would scamper down to relieve her of her pails. And of an even-ing, while she would be singing ballads to her father in the drawing room, they would be flattening their noses against the window, hissing forth their love for her and their hate for each other, and finally turning, with a roar of disgust, and burying their fingers in each other's throats. They were a nice, engaging couple.

It was a May morning. After a night of equatorial thunderstorm, the sun was shining gloriously upon a world of green hill and forest, and far away in Venezuela gleamed the white heights of the Sierra Nevada wrapped in their mantle of eternal snow. Jessie stepped forth from the house, a basket in one hand and a pair of large scissors in the other, and in the same moment and rernando also sprang forth, the one from behind a large aloe, the other from the shadow of a pile of deal boxes.

"Where are you going?" shouted the two ruffians as gently as possi-

"Where neither of you cowards will follow me," laughed the girl. "I would follow you to -

Pedro screamed, stopping abruptly. "So would I!" yelled Fernando. "Where are you going?"

"To gather orchids in Death's Head valley," replied the girl, still smiling.

The two men started and their brown faces turned a little pale. "I saw a patch on one of the trees looking down from my window last evening, and I'm going to have it."
"But it's certain death!" shouted

the two men. "Not it!" said Jessie. "I'll come back safely, you'll find."

"You shan't go!" hissed Pedro, advancing, but Jessie fixed her brown eyes steadily upon him, and her shoulders went back, and her right arm was raised slowly. She seemed about to brush him from her path, and he retreated with a muttered apology.

At that moment Algie strolled on the lawn, ceremoniously raised his big linen cap and said in that elaborately courteous voice of his, "Good morning, Miss Jessie. Can I be of any use? "I am going for some orchids down in Death's Head valley," she said. "You can come with me if you are not afraid." "I slept there last night," said Algie calmly.

Jessie gave a look at the other two, who were glaring with hate at Algie, then turned to the young American and started off with him down the hill.

Pedro hissed an oath at Fernando, who shouted back a curse. Then the two closed and fought each other with knives till Mr. Ogilvie came out and drove them away with a whip.

Only those who have been in Death's Head valley know what sort of a place it is. At the bottom of it the Rio Cauca runs rapidly along between its banks and bowlders, six inches and fifteen feet lie sleep ing in the long, moist grass; mosquitoes in myriads buzz and sting; long lizards skurry up and down the smooth trunks of the trees, and gun to wish she hadn't come, but the calm young man beside her made her feel ashamed of owning little, lobsterlike black insects crawled up their limbs and gave both of them agony. They entered an open glade, and a ferdilance snake suddenly reared up before them and was only dodged with difficulty, Algie giving him a crack on the head with his stick as he passed that left him powerless for ili further malice in this world. Wherever they went they encountered fresh dangers, and all the while, unseen and unknown by she was loved "passionately mad"by two men, "madly passionate"by two men, "madly passionat eyes that ever burned and glaredtwo circles of green malignant fire.

At last they reached the tree on whose topmost branches were blooming the orchids Jessie had Algie, preparing to climb.

"No, no; don't attempt it," cried the girl. "Half the branches seem rotten. You might fall and be

> "And what if I were? Who would miss me? Not a soul!" And he gave a short laugh that was a little bitter.

"Do you say that because I brought you down here?" asked Jes-

"I never dared to think of you as taking the smallest interest in me

"Why?" asked Jessie, making the soft eyes at him. And the leopard behind, seeing them thus absorbed in one another, crept a little nearer.

"Don't look at me like that!" cried Algie, as her face suddenly paled and her eyes opened wide with

"Turn quickly," whispered Jessie. But she was too late. The beast was upon him, its claws in his shoulders, and its teeth in his neck. He turned and writhed, but the brute stuck to him; he gave the stick to Jessie, and, with scream up-on scream, she struck it on the head again and again, while the blood poured down the lad's shoulders, and his strength was visibly ebbing away. At last she brought the cudgel down upon the animal's head with a force that broke its skull, and it relinquished its hold and fell to the earth dead, and Algie fell back upon it in a swoon.

Jessie knelt beside him, wiped the blood from his face and neck and bathed him with water from the river. Hour after hour passed, and though he opened his eyes and spoke to her he was utterly unable to rise. At last the sun set, the forest darkened, the lantern flies began to dart hither and thither and all the strange sounds of the night commenced. Then Jessie began to tremble, and a tear fell upon the lad's face.

"I feel as though I were dying," he murmured faintly.

"No," cried Jessie, and leaped to her feet. "Help! Help!" she scream-cd at the top of her voice. "Help! Help! Help!" And the echoes died away in the blackness of the night.

"Goodby," whispered Algie. "Will you kiss me once?

She stooped and pressed her lips against his, and his head fell back. But he was not dead. Oh, dear, no! That kiss, with the magic force that a kiss may have, had revived him, put life into him, set the blood running fast once more, and presently he raised his head again and said: "Jessie!"

"Yes, darling."
"I believe I shall live." "Thank God!" And she kissed him again.

Then came a great noise of men calling and a great flashing of big lamps and a wild cry in a woman's voice, and half an hour later Algie was being borne back to Santa Nita, his hand held by Jessie.

And sometimes now he tells his bouncing boys of the night he and their mother once spent in the Co-lombian forest. But Jessie listens to it with fear and trembling.—Chicago Tribune.

To Clean Oil Paintings.

An art journal suggests raw potatoes to clean oil paintings. Have a few potatoes at hand, each cut in halves; the fresh surface is dampened slightly with cold water and used to rub the canvas; as the potatoes show soil the surface is sliced off and the rubbing continued. This process will create a little lather, which should be wiped off as fast as it accumulates with a clean, damp sponge. When the whole canvas is cleaned, it should be washed over lightly with clean water, from which the chill is taken off, and finally the water lightly and carefully wiped off with an old clean silk handkerchief. The scenic beauties of Ningara falls are to be increased this sumhissing and foaming and roaring, and in the quiet backwater of the river lie hungry alligators, waiting for something fleshy to take a snap at. Snakes of all lengths between
