

THE BRIEF TIME.

Brief time to sing, my dear, brief time to sing and sigh; We only say good morning and then good night—goodly!

Brief time to love, my dear, in springtime's rosy beams; To drink the honey sweetness, to dream the old, sweet dream;

Oh, life too brief for sighing, and life too brief for song! And the green world at our feet, dear, and overhead the sky,

And love that says good morning only to weep goodly!

DRESS THEIR OWN WOUNDS.

Some Birds That Possess Great Knowledge of Surgery.

There are not a few birds that possess a knowledge of the principles of surgery that is not far from supernatural. The woodcock, the partridge and some other birds are able to dress their wounds with considerable skill.

One day he killed a bird that evidently had been severely wounded at some recent period. The wound was covered and protected by a sort of network of feathers which had been plucked by the bird from its own body and so arranged as to form a plaster completely covering and protecting the wounded surface.

Birds are often found whose limbs have been broken by shot with the fractured ends neatly joined and ligated. M. Dumontell tells of a woodcock that had been shot by a sportsman on the afternoon of a certain day. After a long search the bird was given up, but it was discovered the next morning by an accident.

The Race of Life.

I find the great thing in this world is not so much where we stand as in what direction we are moving. To reach the port of heaven we must sail sometimes with the wind and sometimes against it, but we must sail and not drift, nor lie at anchor.

Every now and then we throw an old schoolmate over the stern with a string of thought tied to him and look—I am afraid with a kind of luxurious and sanctimonious compassion—to see the rate at which the string reels off while he lies there bobbing up and down, poor fellow! and we are dashing along with the white foam and bright sparkle at our bows; the ruffled bosom of prosperity and progress, with a sprig of diamond stuck in it!

The Parched Mouth.

It is not alone hot weather or hard work that makes your mouth dry. Anxiety, serious trouble generally, will parch your mouth and throat more quickly and effectively than anything else.

There are persons who will not betray in the least degree by their looks and general demeanor that they are worried. Many criminals, for instance, appear as cool as cucumbers, although they are inwardly much perturbed, but to an attentive observer the state of their minds is made clear by the parched mouth.

You may take it for granted that a person who is a prey to deep anxiety will show signs of difficulty in speaking. That is because his mouth and throat are dried, and you will see that he rolls his tongue about in order to moisten it. He must be a very cool individual who can prevent that sign of anxiety.

Judge Simonton presided over a session of motion court in Dauphin county Monday morning. Seventeen decrees in divorce were handed down and as soon as the costs are paid, separation will be granted.

A GHOST STORY.

The Black Lady of the Royal Castle of Darmstadt.

The most distinguished ghost of all royal specters appears to be the Black Lady of the castle of Darmstadt. In deep mourning she comes to announce the death of some member of the families of the grand dukes of Hesse or of the Bavarian royal family.

It was agreed that the officer should order the phantom to halt and if it did not obey fire upon it. The grand duke and a few courtiers posted themselves in the vestry of the chapel, from which they could see the path that, according to the legend, the Black Lady always followed.

The grand duke and the people of his suit came out from their hiding place and ran into the courtyard. The brave young officer was stretched on the ground dead. Beside him lay his gun, the barrel of which was torn from the stock and twisted like a corkscrew.

Naval Officers of the Port.

The title of naval officer as applied to one of the officials of the custom house has always been an enigma to most people, and very few have any idea of how it was created.

He had very little confidence in the men whom his brother selected as collectors of customs in this country, and in order to protect his own interests he insisted on appointing a man whose duty it would be to approve every permit issued by the collector before it would be valid.

Mincing Parsley.

There is a right way to do this as well as in doing everything else. If the parsley is wet, dry it thoroughly in a towel; then pick the leaves from the stems; gather the leaves closely between the thumb and two fingers, press tightly and hold on a board with the fingers slanting in such manner that the nails will protect the ends of the fingers from the knife.

In 1874 D. A. A. Buck, an ingenious mechanic of Worcester, Mass., constructed a perfect steam engine of such lilliputian dimensions as to gain for its maker the plaudits of the world. To go into exact details the engine, boiler, pumps, governors and all were so exceedingly small as to only occupy a space seven-sixteenths of an inch in diameter, or about the area of an old fashioned silver three cent piece.

Looks Are Deceptive.

Visitor—I've been in many asylums, but I've never seen such a dangerous, wild eyed lot of lunatics as that group over there, and they're without guards too!

The Origin of the Menu.

A German gastronomic publication gives the following account of the origin of the menu: At the meeting of electors in Regensburg in the year 1489 Elector Henry of Braunschweig attracted general notice at a state dinner.

Tests For Precious Stones.

Very little reliance can be placed on color as a test for precious stones. All red stones are not rubies nor white stones diamonds. There are yellow sapphires, green diamonds and blue spinels. In the diagnosis of precious stones it is always advisable to apply as many different tests as possible and to be guided by the result of them all, as almost any single test may mislead.

BANNER SALVE

The most healing salve in the world.

SCARED BY THE POPE.

One Occasion When Kaiser Wilhelm Lost His Self Possession.

Kaiser Wilhelm, always a self possessed character, was even as a lad equal to almost any emergency, but there was one time in his life when his aplomb failed him completely, and that was when he was received in a private audience by Leo XIII. Strange to say, the self possessed young emperor felt completely overawed by the presence of the holy father and his entourage.

As he caught sight of the Pope in white garments, stiff, immobile, almost unearthly, surrounded by half a dozen cardinals in red robes, who were looking at him curiously, his half powerless right hand, in which he held his present for the pope, a gold snuffbox, with his own portrait framed in rubies, shook so violently that he dropped the treasure.

At last everything was put straight. His holiness was still quietly smiling his everyday smile, and William advanced a few steps to deliver his little speech, which he did with a sulky voice. He looked as furious as if he had just suffered from the awkwardness of somebody else, and they say that 24 hours afterward his brow remained as closely knitted as those of a bear.

Episcopal Heraldry.

In the arms of the archbishop of Canterbury there appears a decoration somewhat like a clergyman's collar with an extended linen band, but it is intended to represent a narrow, circular strip of white wool supposed to be shorn from the lambs of St. Agnes at Rome, which was worn round the shoulders, and had two such hanging bands, one before and the other behind, while the crosses upon it are thought originally to represent the pins by which it was fastened to the vestment.

Expensive as was its possession, it was by no means a mere luxury, for by the decretals of Pope Gregory no act of an archbishop was valid without it. If he had not received it, he could not confer orders, consecrate churches or summon a council. The small staff, the head of which appears inside the half circle formed by the pallium as it falls over the shield, is the crozier, a staff with a cruciform head that is borne by or before an archbishop alone, though the simple pastoral staff with an ornamental crook, which merely denotes the office of a bishop, is often mistakenly called a crozier.

A Wonderful Steam Engine.

In 1874 D. A. A. Buck, an ingenious mechanic of Worcester, Mass., constructed a perfect steam engine of such lilliputian dimensions as to gain for its maker the plaudits of the world. To go into exact details the engine, boiler, pumps, governors and all were so exceedingly small as to only occupy a space seven-sixteenths of an inch in diameter, or about the area of an old fashioned silver three cent piece.

Vanishing Bird Races.

The flamingo and the pink curlew are no more, the parakeet and egret are going fast, the white pelican is a tradition only, like the dodo. Some birds increase under the protection of man because he wages war on more destructive enemies. The quail sets at naught the breacher and the trap if allowed to forage in the grainfields, but there are others that vanish before the face of man as does the mist before the morning sun.

ANNA TORGESON'S NOTE

By H. I. CLEVELAND.

Of the thousands of Norwegians and Swedes set upon the prairies of the Dakotas 20 years ago comparatively few read or understood English. It was surprising, though, how quickly they adjusted themselves to their new environment.

In the Hay Meadows school district was a Norwegian family of the name of Torgeson. The mother, Anna, was perhaps 23 or 23 years old. The father was 30. The three children were toddlers, too young for school and books. Nevertheless when winter school opened, Anna Torgeson, with one child at her breast and two at her skirts, forced her way across the prairie to the schoolhouse and asked for admission.

He wore his peaked hat, his elated coat, his skin trousers and avoided his American neighbors except as he was forced to trade with them. Although he soon understood a few words of English when a land office collector came for the last payment on his final proof notice, he would speak to him only in the Norse tongue.

So the other read it to him, and then Torgeson crumpled it in his hand and said: "Let her stay there. She cares more for the school than for me." He sat before his good fire hour after hour, and once in awhile when he thought he was unobserved he would glance at the writing of the note he could not read.

FISHING DOWN CHIMNEYS.

A Sinker as Necessary on the Lines as on Those Dropped in the Sea. "Fish lines," said a man standing on a roof and apparently fishing with a drop line down a chimney, "are, as you will observe if you will wait here a minute, not the only ones on which sinkers are used."

All through November and December of that dreary winter Anna Torgeson made her way to the schoolhouse and worked for mastery of the English tongue. Torgeson staid at the farm minding the cattle and their fodder or brooding over his pipe and cups. That his wife should not side with him was the bitterest thing he had to endure.

wife yet," they said.

But Torgeson remained bitterly against her. Only the babies gave her love and comfort. A January day came when the sun rose warm over the snow covered prairies and in the air there was a false whisper of spring.

When school closed, a frightful blizzard was upon them. The thermometer had fallen to far below zero and the air was filled with sleet that cut the skin like chopped glass.

"I can't read it," grumbled Torgeson. So the other read it to him, and then Torgeson crumpled it in his hand and said: "Let her stay there. She cares more for the school than for me."

He was Torgeson, the obstinate, but his wife and babies were over in that schoolhouse without much fuel or food. He took with him the man who had brought the note, and they brought the horses out of the stables, and they fought as men never fought before against snow and cold, and they gained the school, a mile away, in two hours, and Torgeson beat open the door, and the blast came with him, but the anger and the old pain had gone from him forever.

Bending over the stove to keep herself and babies alive, Anna Torgeson heard his voice, knew by his note that out of the horror he had struggled with to reach her new love and hope had come, and she leaped to him and was caught in his arms, never to be put from him again.—Chicago Record-Herald.
