

WORDS OF WISDOM.

When in doubt tell the truth.—Samuel Clemens. What makes life dreary is want of motive.—George Eliot. A laugh is worth a hundred groans in any market.—Chas Lamb. Honest good humor is the oil and wine of a merry meeting.—Irving. He is a wise man who wastes no energy on pursuits for which he is not fitted.—Gladstone. If you will be cherished when you are old, be courteous when you are young.—John Lyly. There is nothing so powerful as example. We put others straight by walking ourselves.—Mrs. Swetchine. If you would hit the target, aim a little above it. Every arrow that flies feels the attraction of earth.—Loughfellow. Have a purpose in life, and having it, throw such strength of mind and muscle into your work as God has given you.—Carlyle. Formerly we were guided by the wisdom of our ancestors; now we are hurried along by the wisdom of our descendants.—Horne. Thou hast but one inalienable right, and that is the sublime one of doing thy duty at all times, under all circumstances, and in all places.—F. R. Marvin.

FORTUNES OF A MANUSCRIPT.

A Philadelphia newspaper man gives the following interesting account of his experience in marketing a manuscript: "The story was originally a tale of love and adventure and contained about 5,000 words. I wrote it three years ago and persistently sent it the rounds of the magazines. It always came back. Then I tried the class publications, changing it from time to time to conform to the requirements of each. Once I injected a comedy vein into it and sent it to a comic weekly. On another occasion, the atmosphere turned it into a Christmas story, and some of that still remains. It has been every kind of a story that you could think of. Finally I sold it to the publication in which it has just appeared. It has dwindled from 5,000 words to 1,500 words, and I don't suppose there are a hundred words of the original version left; but I got $15 for it, and I shall eat regularly for awhile at any rate."

A Sign Reader. "I'm beginning to be able to read signs!" said Harry, rushing into the house to display his new accomplishment.

"No! Are you really?" asked a round-eyed small sister. "Yes, indeed. Listen to this: What do you think it's a sign of our old gray cat catches a bird?"

The little sister pondered and gave it up. "I'm sure I don't know, Harry. Do tell me."

"It's a sure sign of bad luck for the bird!" cried Harry, rushing out again in a hurry.

Open the Door of Your Heart. Open the door of your heart, my lad. To the angels of love and truth. When the world is full of unnumbered joys.

Open the door of your heart, my lass. To the things that shall abide. To the holy thoughts that lift your soul. Like the stars at eventide.

Open the door of your heart, my friend. Headless of class or creed. When you hear the cry of a brother's voice.

Lifted With Palm. Fill a glass almost full of water and place your hand over it, the fingers forming a right angle, as shown in the lower figure.

from the glass you will create an airtight space under your hand sufficient to overcome the weight of the glass, so that you can lift it.

CONDENSED STORIES.

He Never Opens a Letter With the Address Turned Down.

"I am not superstitious," remarked Representative Otey of Virginia, "but that looks like a very fine pin." Thereat the Virginian stooped in his walk through the long corridor of the capitol and picked up a small black-headed pin. "I am not superstitious," he repeated, "but there is one thing I never do—I never open a letter with the address turned down. I will tell you why. When I was a bank cashier, I had a lot of letters in my mail one day. They were piled up neatly before me, and I began to look over the contents of each. Finally down in the pile quite a way there lay a letter turned back up. I opened it without looking at the address and pulled out a certificate for a deposit of $3,000 in the bank."

"I scanned those figures closely. I knew they were my handwriting, the ciphers being large and clear. But I also knew that certificate had been for only $300, or, rather, the deposit had been for only $300, and plainly I had made a mistake in transferring it. You can wager that I pulled myself together very quickly, and although several months had elapsed and the certificate had gone into the hands of a third party, I tried to stop payment on it.

"Well, to make a long story short, the whole thing was straightened out, and neither I nor the bank lost any money by the transaction. But from that day to this I never open a letter with the back of the envelope toward me."—Washington Post.

Reserves in Wax.

Senator Millard of Nebraska was in the National museum the other afternoon. He was examining with much interest the group of wax figures dressed in the various uniforms worn by United States soldiers since the days of the Revolution. A member of a party of tourists stepped up to the senator and said:

HE STEPPED UP TO THE SENATOR.

"Can you tell me, sir, if these are soldiers who were killed in our last war?"

"No," replied Senator Millard; "these are soldiers we are saving to be killed in our next war."—Washington Cor. New York World.

They Were His Clothes.

Oliver Hazard Perry Belmont was the first representative to appear in the house with a new spring suit of clothes. It was a check worsted which Representative Dick said was louder than the speech which Rhea of Kentucky was delivering at the time. The members crowded about Mr. Belmont and offered congratulations on his quiet attire. He took their gibes good naturedly until one of them said:

"I believe that suit makes more noise than Belmont's red automobile when it is going down Pennsylvania avenue, and the automobile sounds like a machine gun in action."

"Now, see here," rejoined the New York city congressman testily, "these clothes are mine, and I am wearing them."

The other representatives moved away at this sign of ill temper and talked of introducing a resolution to the effect that the millionaire's clothes disturbed the deliberations of the house.—Cor. Chicago News.

A Glance at the Future.

Professor Collins, Pennsylvania's scientific agriculturist, some time ago was recommending to a Berks county farmer a powerfully fertilizing manure in which he was interested. After some discussion the sagacious farmer declared that he had no faith in the manure, as the proposed quantity was too small to be of any use.

"My dear sir," said the professor, "such are the wonderful discoveries in science that I should not be surprised if in the near future we carry the manure for acres of land to the field in the pocket of our coat."

"That may be so," replied the farmer, "but in that case I'm inclined to think you would carry back the crop in the pocket of your vest."

WHY IT BELIEVES.

Says the N. Y. Independent: "We believe in God, not because of lightning and volcanoes, but in spite of them. We do not expect to understand all the dealings of the Almighty. We do not yet understand the forces of nature, and are very far from unraveling the secrets of matter and life that are right around us, under our eyes. But, ignorant as we are, there are some things that we can already know. Believing in God, we believe that he created nature and gave it its laws. There are those whose notion of God requires them to believe that he gave nature no laws or powers, but that every act of nature, every dropping of an apple, every chemical combination, every evaporation of a drop of dew, is a special act of divine will exercised on nature, and they say that what we call laws of nature are only God's habit of doing things. This is a needless way of maintaining the divine rule over nature. It involves the disagreeable thought that every mischief of fever or flood or storm or flame is the effect of a special volition of God to that particular end. It is wiser and more philosophical, as well as more natural to think of nature as controlled by laws imposed upon it, those laws acting automatically; although their action can to some extent be controlled or diverted by the opposing will of living beings."
