The list of subscribers to the Fulton County News is growing steadily longer. Just four more papers after this week, and the News will have rounded out three years of existence. While the News has met with almost universal favor, there are still a few people whose names are not on our list—a few people who are still waiting to see if the "child will live." Don't wait. The News will live longer than you—longer than its founder. Subscribe for the News, and subscribe now.

In a recent talk to the constables Judge White, of Indiana county, called their attention to the law requiring supervisors to pick the loose stones from the roads, saying it was very important that this law be enforced. He also pointed out the fact that a fine of $10 can be recovered from any supervisor who refuses this duty. The first case of this kind was brought in Blair county last week when two supervisors were sued for failing to remove loose stones from a public road. It would be well for some Fulton county supervisors to heed and comply with the law in this respect.
