THE CONFESSION

DAVID LEWIS

THE NOTED HIGHWAYMAN AND COUNTERFEITER.

After leaving Burlington with my part of the common stock, and finding that the Vermonters, were too much like their ancestors the Yankees, to permit a "green hand" like me to impose upon their credulity, I considered repeatedly, "Oh! my mother! my my wisest plan was to make my way into New York and Pennsylvania, as I knew that in the latter state a great portion of the population consisted of Germans, who while they are upright and honest themselves, are unsuspecting of the villainies of others. In New York, I met with considerable success in passing and exchanging my counterfeit money, but crime not always prospering or escaping detection. I was discovered in an unlucky bargain which I had concluded with a certain Gen. Root, who was then on an electioneering campaign, and who had invited me to crack a bottle of wine with him to the health and success of Gov. Daniel D. Tompkins. Having taken a fancy to one of the General's horses and finding him rather soft in the head we soon struck a bargain, and I paid him principally with my Burlington notes. In attempting to repass some of these bills the General was taken up. and being in a place entirely unknown was on the eve of being committed for trial, when a citizen who had seen him receive the notes, went bail for his appearance, and accompanied the General in pursuit of me. Not expecting an immediate detection I had retired to bed. The General pressing her wishes that we don't ask what is good for it and and his companion found me after should put up for the remainder get some medicine with little or preparing to re-wall it. It was up in suug quarters for the night and instantly hurried me off to a magistrate who made out my commitment and I soon found myself lodged in the jail at Troy. I lay here some weeks and had very gloomy prospects, when reflecting on the result of my trial, which was to come on in about a month, but soon began to flatter myself with a prospect of escape, through the agency of the daughter of the jailor, who, in her fathers absence, introduced to my room a young woman who was an intiercise of travel that, notwithmate friend of hers, and who I standing her agitation of spirit, had often remarked gazing through the bars of my window from the house opposite, and who apparently much interested in my fate. The sentiments of pity which at first warmed the bosom of this tender-hearted young woman, soon ripened into love, and after a short courtship at ing tree, proclaimed the near ap-
