THE CONFESSION
OF DAVID LEWIS
THE NOTED
HIGHWAYMAN AND COUNTERFEITH
On our arrival at the place destination I had many opport nities of indulging my vicious pr pensities, and frequently plu

dered both officers and men of their money and property. The bustle of a camp amused me for some time but the delay in crossing the lines, occasioned by General Smyth's strange conduct, created so much dissatisfaction that I was not sorry, eager as I was to plunder the enemy, when ing Christ on the street corners ; the campaign ended. The war at this time was nothing here but a war of Proclamation, and the failure of the expedition produced nothing but expense to the govbad men and bad men make good ernment, laughter among the of ficers and soldiers of the army, at the crazy behavior, and bombastic style of the commanding general. Having received from the commanding officer, or wagon master, a certificate of the num. ers are paid $25,000 a year to ber of days employed in the public service, I prepared to return, but a sudden thought entering my head of going off with my employer's wagon and horses, I yielded to the temptation, and changing the direction of my route, steered for the Allegheny mountains in Pennsylvania, whose scattered population and numerous caverns and breaks afforded various coverts and hiding places for criminals and fugitives. I parted with my wagon and team as soon as I could procure a pur chaser, but the money I never returned to my employer. Whenever I thought of this unsuspecting, honest man who had misplaced in me so much confidence, the recollection of my ungrateful conduct for a long time occasioned me many a pang. "I was a stranger and he took me in, hungry and he fed me, naked and he clothed me;" but guilt has no memory for kindness, and I forgot them all in my wretched pursuits of means to gratify my sensual desires. I need not mention pages ever fall into his hands, he will certainly discover that the unfortunate David Lewis and the person who betrayed his trust, under the fictitious name of "Peter Vanburen," are one and the same person. agreeable to the last request she one tent. ever made. The unexpectedness of the news and the unfeeling manner in which the intelligence was conveyed, brought tears to Breaking into a blazing home the mountain, not far from the Trial bottle free.
