While in Altoona a few days ago, we called at the postoffice which is snugly housed in a new building erected by the U. S. Government at a cost of $150,000.—While not the postmaster, the practical head of the concern is Reamer Hoke, who has been assistant postmaster of that city for many years. In fact, Reamer went with his father's family from this place to Altoona in the spring of 1882; and, in the fall of that year, was given a position in the post office, and he has been there almost continuously, since. When he recognized us, one of his old McConnellsburg neighbors, he dropped his work and led us through the various apartments of the building, and pointed out the attention Uncle Sam gives to the comfort of his employees and to the efficiency of their service. What interested us most was the stamp-cancelling machine. While it can cancel the stamp, print on the envelope the name of the postoffice with the day and hour, at the rate of a thousand a minute, it seems like a very simple little piece of mechanism, and that almost any postmaster might make one if he had the running gears of an old clock, a piece or two of an old tin fruit can, and a pair of old suspenders for helting.

Fulton county editors are not the only people that have troubles of their own; but they never speak of them. If a hundred of their subscribers owed them for subscription two or three years, they would never mention it, but would labor patiently on; and, though Christmas is nearing and everybody else will have money enough to buy a chicken for dinner, and have some ginger cakes besides, they will be content.—There does seem to be a limit, however; for an editor up in Huntington county last week gave way to his feelings, and this is what he said:

The lady (?) who yesterday called the attention of another to our patched breeches, whereat both laughed so heartily, is informed that a new pair will be purchased if her husband's bill is settled. It has been due ten years. Don't criticise a printer's dress too closely while you are wearing silk with money due us. Tell your husband to send us $11.75 and save the costs of a law suit. We need another pair of pants."
