profit and better contentment. While laborers are moving to the railroad shops and other manufacturing centers, getting big wages and paying high rent and dear board, let us be busy looking after our interests and see that the monopolist between the farmer and the consumer does not get three-fourths of the farmer's profit. Let us fight monopolies. This can best be done through organized effort. Let us combine at the polls, and elect men who are farmers of the type that can stand up for the right under the hardest pressure—men who consider righteousness far above gold. Let us have a legislative committee, whose business it shall be to find out what bills are pending, both state and national. Look into their meaning, and notify our representatives that we expect them to see that bills detrimental to the interests of the farmers are tabled as soon as possible. Let us see that the scheme that is being contemplated to improve the arid lands in the West, which would make a few men immensely rich, namely, those that manage the project, and put thousands of acres of fertile land into cultivation that is not needed for years to come, and thus increase production, which would react upon the eastern farmer. This we do not want to see, unless we want hard times.

Let us strive for the equalization of taxation. Let us do what we can to have railroads and corporations pay their just share of taxes. Farmers cannot give free passes, expecting, when the time comes, to be favored for these courtesies; but they can vote.

Road improvement, which is sure to come, should claim our serious attention. Unless the farmers look into the matter, and see that the money shall come from the Government—either state or national, or both, they will certainly be compelled to pay the majority of the tax for the purpose of improving the roads or keeping up a horde of officers in which, if things keep up as they are, the farmers would have no representation at all.

Let us notice a few things that will be a benefit to us in way of disposing of our live stock &c. I believe that we should have a better class of live stock. I think that the raising of plenty of good dairy cows will be an excellent thing for us farmers to do. Milk all you can, feed well, and sell the best. Good cows are always in great demand. Let us have special sale days—a stock yard on a small scale until we can run it on a large scale. This would be a new feature, and would be in direct line with agriculture; it would create interest and make business and stock raising more pleasant and profitable.

Let us advocate the idea of grinding our grain at home, have a storage house at railroad station if necessary for convenience, and have the by-products at home where they ought to be. Let us become exporters instead of importers.

Let us stop the emigration from our county to the city by improving our home facilities. Let us enlist the aid of capitalists to help us develop our natural resources and we will have use for our children at home, in the midst of the beautiful scenes of nature, where beauties are unfolding every hour; and, instead of sitting around waiting for something to turn up, let us turn something up, and quit the cry of, "farming don't pay," which only has the effect of depreciating land values, keeping capitalists from investing among us, and driving people from the farm. Let us look after each other's interests, so far as consistent. If a merchant comes around and you do not have what he wants—let it be farm or what not—tell him that your neighbor keeps good stock, (let us keep good stock, so that we don't tell a lie) and, perhaps he has some to sell.

Let us down the spirit of envy and jealousy. Remember that you are your brother's keeper. Help him on! Help him on! Help him on!

DAVID LEWIS THE NOTED HIGHWAYMAN AND COUNTERFEITER.

me to recollect in present distracted state of mind and suffering condition of bodily pain. I have been thus particular to gratify the wish of a near and dear friend, who has always taken the greatest interest in my fate, attended me frequently in my illness, and who has promised to remain the friend of my wife, whom a few days more will make a widow, and the father of my beloved children, soon to become the orphans of charity, without his protecting care. In addition to my anxiety to oblige one who was my friend in adversity, I have been induced to undergo the painful task of making this confession, with the hope and belief that the publication of my unhappy case may be useful not only to my surviving companions and to society in general, but more especially to the youth of the rising generation, operating as a solemn warning to old and young against indulging in the same wicked practices which have distinguished my unhappy life and brought ruin on myself and disgrace upon my family and connection.

The ways of sin can have no pleasure in them. If every robber and criminal found as little satisfaction in following the pursuits of vice as I have done, he must confess their insufficiency to obtain happiness or even a common share of tranquillity. During the day I have felt as if the eyes of all men were upon me, and at night was under constant dread of secret apprehension.

Alas! the only little happiness I ever tasted was in the bosom of my family and in the society of my wife. When, after a guilty round of crime and dissipation, I have returned to the little room that contained my beloved Malinda, the calm abode of humble virtue, and found her engaged in the concerns of domestic industry; when I have entered by surprise and perceived her, unseen, sitting at the wheel, and heard her sing the old song of "Bess and Her Spinning Wheel," I have been overpowered with feelings of delight, and shed tears of joy.

Although I deeply lament my second marriage, and blame myself for involving an amiable stranger in distress and misfortune, I pray for her forgiveness, and hope she will continue the mother and guardian of my little girls, whose tender years will require all her care and all her instruction to raise them up in virtue and industry. When I last saw them they promised to be as beautiful as the daughters of Job. Should they be as virtuous as their lovely namesake, I shall not have lived altogether in vain, but may be honored after my death in the honors paid them, and have the disgraceful end of an ignominious life washed away by the virtuous offspring of my Jezebel and Heziah.

Philadelphia, in my opinion, is by no means a good place to bring up a family. There are fewer snares and less temptations in the country than in the city; under this impression, I recommended it to my wife to return to Fayette, as soon as she can make the necessary arrangements for a removal of herself and children.

While I have been in jail, I have received every attention due to me in my situation, not only from the physicians of the town, but the ladies and gentlemen generally; and to Sheriff Mitchell, and his excellent lady, I should be most ungrateful indeed if I did not express my thanks for the many kind offices of humanity and benevolence they continued to bestow on me from the first day of my lodgment in jail. The jailer and his family have been equally kind and good; and I die at peace with all men.

I sincerely forgive them for being the instruments of my death. Acting under the authority of the law, they performed only their duty as good citizens, and have set an example worthy of imitation, in risking their own lives to save society, and liberate the country from the depredations and terrors of a desperate band of robbers, counterfeiters and

To the amiable minister who visited me in jail and prayed for me and with me when I lay on my miserable pallet, looking with fear and trembling in awful suspense for the approach of death, I return the unfeigned thanks of an oppressed sinner for his frequent intercessions at the "Throne of Grace" in my behalf. And you, my kind friend, who have promised to remain with me and close my eyes, accept my grateful acknowledgments for all you have done for me; and, when you have seen me laid with decency in the grave, bear to my mother the last token of remembrance she will ever receive from her dying son, a small lock of hair, cut with his own hand from the head of the unfortunate but repentant

THE AMERICAN MONTHLY REVIEW OF REVIEWS. How Can I Keep Up with the Times? It is pretty hard to keep well informed on the political news, the scientific news, the literary news, the educational movements, the great business developments, the hundreds of interesting and valuable articles in the hundreds of excellent magazines. About the only way it can be done by the average busy man and woman is to read a magazine like "The Review of Reviews," and as it is the only magazine of the sort, it is a good thing to send $2.50 for a year's subscription.

Your Column. To show our appreciation of the way in which the Fulton County News is being adopted into the homes of the people of this county, we have set apart this column for the FREE use of our subscribers for advertising purposes, subject to the following conditions: 1. It is free only to those who are paid-up subscribers. 2. Only personal property can be advertised. 3. Notices must not exceed 30 w. rds. 4. All "legal" notices excluded. 5. Not free to merchants, or anyone to advertise goods sold under a mercantile license. The primary object of this column is to afford farmers and folks who are not in public business, an opportunity to bring to public attention products or stocks they may have to sell, or may want to buy. Now, this space is yours: if you want to buy a horse, if you want to sell a pig, a butterfly, some hay, a goose, or if you want to advertise for a wife—this column is yours. The News is read weekly by eight thousand people, and is the best advertising medium in the county.

THE FULTON COUNTY NEWS Covers the Field. In every part of the County faithful reporters are located that gather the daily happenings. Then there is the State and National News, War News, a Department for the Farmer and Mechanic, Latest Fashions for the Ladies, The latest New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia Markets.
