The Hagerstown Globe says that George T. Leiter read with much interest the article about George Tritle, who never shaved after the Confederates stole his razor. Mr. Leiter had an experience somewhat similar in character. In 1862, when he lived at Kemp's Mills, the Union soldiers in their march down the Cumberland Valley made a raid on the mill, where, among other things, Mr. Leiter kept his shaving utensils. His fine razor was carried off and from that day on he has never shaved.

That Charter.

The application for a charter for the incline railway from McConnellsburg to London was filed in the State Department, but was not formally presented to the Governor last Friday for the reason that the Governor has taken the position that charters should not be granted unless there was capital enough subscribed first to form a working basis. This is contrary to all precedent, and dozens of applications are being held up just the same as ours. It is probable that the Governor will revise his opinion and that the charter will be granted as asked for.

Cow Peas.

[The following is an extract from a paper read by Prof. W. F. Massey of Raleigh, N. C., at the meeting of the State Board of Agriculture at Harrisburg on the 29th ult. The paper was entitled "The Southern Cow Pea, and its Probable place in the Agriculture of the Middle States." It contained so much valuable information that might be useful to the farmers of Fulton county, that we have gladly given it a place in our columns.—Editor.]

Cow Peas are well adapted to poor land, will grow where clover will not, and is largely taking the place of clover in the South, where clover is an uncertain crop; but, while an excellent crop, either for feeding or manure, it is not intended to supersede, but, rather to supplement that crop. Cow peas are like clover in being a leguminous crop, and are somehow able to get nitrogen, either from the soil or from the air, and with the aid of germs or tubercles, which are minute insects or fungus vegetable growths, fix the nitrogen or ammonia ready for the use of following crop.

As a crop they are highly valuable to be sown after a wheat crop has been cut from land that has failed to catch grass. It is an excellent pasture for hogs or cows or valuable as a hay crop because by the use of it, bran can be almost entirely dispensed with. Though they do not grow well on heavy limestone land, they are found to be well adapted to either poor land or acid land, and do not need lime to assist their growth. They flourish anywhere south of the 40th degree of latitude, so that we know that we are right in the belt of country adapted to them, although they have been known to do well in Iowa, Wisconsin and Vermont.

There are many varieties. Warren's Extra Early ripens in sixty days after planting. Black peas make excellent hay which takes three or four days to cure much like clover seed is cured by rolling the cocks around till in proper shape or till it will not show moisture when twisted into a rope, and then put into the barn and let it ferment, if it will, but do not disturb it. The proper way to cut is when the pods get yellow. If the crop fails to mature, it still makes a good pasture or a valuable manure. For varieties suited to our climate the Large Black or Whippoorwill was named. The Wonderful grows very strong and erect, but care should be taken to secure home grown seed if possible.

U. S. Bulletin No. 98 will be furnished free as well as State bulletin 102 upon application. Information as to seed etc., will be furnished by the Editor upon application.
