Seven Dollars, Not Thirty Thousand. Destruction of Life and Property in the Postmaster General Payne made pub lic the answers of Henry A. Castle, the auditor of the Treasury for the Postoffice Department and Comptroller Tracewell, of the Treasury, regarding the Tolloch charges of irregularities in the postal administration. The answers' specifically deny allegations of wrongful procedure.

Comptroller Tracewell charges T. W Gilmer, formerly an expert of his office, with abstracting, but subsequently returning upon demand, the letter authorizing Mr. Gilmer to examine the accounts of any postoffice except Washington and New York.

Mr. Tracewell alleges this letter was written by Gilmer himself without any suggestion from the Controller. Mr. Castle says that the sum of the tentative disallowances by Expert Gilmer and the Comptroller aggregated $932; that the credits finally disallowed out of a total of a quarter of a million were $165, of which he claims only $7 was incorrectly audited. This, Mr. Castle says, is the basis of Mr. Tulloch's charge of disallowances of $30,000 or $40,000. The Postmaster General's statement says that the letters are made public at the request of the two officials, and that it will appear from them how much foundation there was for the Tulloch statements

Mr. Castle, in his answers, says that Mr. Tulloch shares in a prevailing mis apprehension that an auditor is charged with the responsibility of keeping other officials "correct and honest," and in determining the necessities of the service. The auditor says that such functions would be fatal to administrative freedom by the head of a department. Regarding the settlement and subse quent revision of an account of the late Postmaster Willett, of Washington, which involved alleged irregularities in Porto Rico during the military opera-tions there, the auditor replies that every item believed to be illegal was disallowed by the auditor's office. The wide discretion given in the language of the appropriations for military postal service, according to the auditor's answer, shows that Congress intended to exempt the disbursements of those ap-propriations from many of the ordinary regulations.
