Interesting Stop at Port Said-Vessel Takes Coal.

And Her Voyage Down on the Red Sea, Across Which Moses Led the Isrælites A Good While Ago.

S. S. "INDIA," Dec. 11.-Between Suez and Aden.

When I mailed you my last let. well. ter we had only reached Port Said. Just a few miles out of port we saw the mail steamer pass us on its way home, and knew our letters would have to wait another week. The Pilot came on board a few miles out, and by 6 p. m, we had cast anchor within 300 yards of shore. No sooner had we made fast than dozens of native Egyptian boats with merchants and conjares on board came to the steamer, jabbering and gesticulating like mad The sea was as smooth as glass and like sliver, and there were French, German and English peal at Enid. troop ships anchored all around us, ready to take on coal. That process is most interesting: A large coal barge comes up 'long side, and dozens of natives with colored shawls wrapped about their heads, a kind of loose shirt. with bare feet form in line and their heads or shoulders up a steep gang plank and dump it mto the hole, all the while chanting or yelling in an uncanny way .-
