ARMY BROUGHT FROM SPAIN

Another Chapter on the Early History of the Netherlands.

WRITTEN BY HENRY WOLF.

whom it was said that he had never lost a battle. Implicit obedience of his soldiers was his motto; non-compliance with the least of his orders was punished with death, yet on the other hand he indulged them in such licentious- troops, and every space in the rug, coat or gloves, ness as to lower them to the level with brutes In this the soldier thought himself well repaid for all the hardships he had to en dure. Alva therefore was the idol of his army. He was known as having a heart void of all compassion; the loss of human lives scabs, and its hair all came out. I another that he could not move an was not considered in his plans, tried many remedies but none ordinary brick tied to the end of but only intent upon how he could best serve and please his master, king Philip.

The only route from Spain to the provinces which could at this hope of safety was the one over Mount Cenis in the Alps. Consequently the army was conveyed on ships from Carthagena to Genoa; from there it marched over the Alps, taking the Mount Cenis pass-the same which Hannibal crossed 1800 years before. In just 14 days the passage was on every box. Sold at Trout's accomplished, nothing occurring | drug store. to mar its success. At Franche Comte a body of dragoons which had been recruited in Burgundia attached themselves to the Duke's forces, likewise three regiments of German infantry at Luxemburg. At Thionville Francts Ibarra met the Duke to greet him in the name of Margaretta and to inspect his orders from the king, which were to the effect that he was chief governor of the provinces, with Margaretta as assistant; but wisely concealed other instructions he had received from the king. At the first news of the coming of the Duke a general fear and dread permeated every mind, as it was plain to every one to see the great calamity which was in store for the nation. But especially did the Protestants see utter ruin before them; so no less than 100,000 of them fled from the country-many penniless,not succeeding in turning their real estate into money. Men of the highest standing in the nation left the country, one of which was Prince William of Orange, a man beloved and trusted by all the people of the Netherlands, to whom they looked for counsel and guidance in all their trouble. William had the welfare of the na- Question: tion at heart, had a clear sight into existing affairs, and therefore was mistrusted and feared by the Spaniards. He knew that his life was aimed at as well as others of high rank, especially his friend Prince Gavre, Count of Egmont, whom he counselled to flee for his life, but who could not see it in that light, trusting in the great service he had rendered the long. In vain did William warn his friend of Spanish treachery and bigotry,-Egmont would stay, while Orange hastened to Germany. He never more saw Egmont alive.

The War In The East.

The war in the far East has begun and until one or the other of two very stubborn antagonists yields to reason the work of destruction will proceed with great vigor and success and it may be predicted that within a year the world will be at least a billion dollars poorer. What powers other that those at present involved will participate in the operations it is impossible to even conjecture. It may confidently be said that Japan relies on Great Britain to help her out and it is about equally certain that in the event of such interposition France and Germany will take a hand on the other side. The outlook, therefore, is for a conflict of vast proportions and immense destructiveness.

Singularly enough this fearful conflict has been begun without even the shadow of reason. That is to say Russia has entered upon an enterprise which is certain to entail vast losses in support of a claim which is not only unjust but absurd. In other words having stolen from the Chinese Empire the province of Mancheria the government of the Czar now proposes to seize the Kingdom of Korea for the reason that in possession of an enemy it would be a dangerous strategic point. On the other hand Japan proposes to occupy or at least control Korea for the same reason and thus the persons and property of a people are made a subject of traffic or quarrel between two Empires, neither of which has a shadow of a claim.

All this is outrageous of course but it is in line with the tendencies of the times. When men were more conscientious and rulers more just the small nation was as secure in its rights and property as the more powerful. For example, a dozen years ago this country, built upon the rock of conscience and maintained within the lines of justice, would no more have thought of menacing the weakest Republic in the South America group than it would of sending a fleet of air ships to invade the moon. But now our war Lord, booted and spurred, conspires with adventurers to loot a Republic which we are under treaty obligations to protect and refuses to obey the command of Congress for the evidence of his terpitude.
