If you invite some men to advertise, they'll tell you nobody reads weekly papers now. "Wouldn't pay a cent for a column," they'll declare. Let one of them be caught kissing the servant girl, and if the printing office is in the fifteenth story of a building; he'll climb all the way up and ask the editor to say nothing of that little affair, "which has been greatly exaggerated, can all be explained and so forth. Here's a box of cigars, and how much is my bill up to a year from next January."—But no one reads a weekly paper. Oh no. All successful business men advertise.
