The Ispanese are in touch with the Russians at Tie Pass, and Field Marshal Oyama is pushing the advantage gained, determined, if possible to drive the Russians from their latest shelter and force into a panic.

The full extent of the Russian disaster is still unknown. The Russian censors prisoners taken by the Japanese from the press dispatches. Kuropatkin has evidently lost the whole, or the larger portion, of at least one army corps and a part of another. He reports that 1,190 officers and 40,391 men are missing at

While a small portion of Kuropatkin's army has reached Tie Pass, the greater part of those who escaped from the battle of Mukden are still struggling northward, being at last accounts between 12 and 16 miles from their goal, with the Japanese, flushed with victory and rein-forced by fresh men, harassing them from all sides. Even should the remnant of the army reach Tie Pass, it is hardly possible for it to make a stand there against the overwhelming force opposing it, especially as the Russians worn out and weakened by the loss of men, guns and ammunition
