The above institution is an ideal place for a convalescent, surrounded with its large oak and pine trees, the air is fresh and fragrant with its new mown hay. The patients are all congenial, each one trying to show their gratitude. The matron, Mrs. Stevenson, is perfectly adapted to her position, as well as the assistant, Miss Wheeler, both being able to entertain the patients in a very delightful manner. Special care must be taken in handling the eggs the first five days of incubation, when life is not firmly established.

The cause of fowls taking cold is allowing them to sleep where they are exposed to drafts and feeding them soft and sloppy foods.

It requires capital to go into the poultry business on anything but a very small scale, and economizing on some things is the wrong thing to do.
