Talk about your swell social functions! Your birthday surprise parties, your church festival, or your limekiln swadlop suppers! These might do when there is nothing better in sight, but it was left for N. B. Henry, the boss barn builder, to inaugurate what is likely to become a more popular gathering than even a darkey campmeeting. It is simply a barn raising. The way Mr. Henry does it, or rather the way he did it last Saturday, is as follows: He is engaged now with his force of men in building a big barn for Johnnie Magsam, a mile and a half southeast of town. It was known to him that by last Saturday the barn would be ready to raise, and men would be needed. We do not know how he made that fact known to the public, but early on that day, men were there by the score—farmers, lawyers, doctors and merchants—and by noon the big structure was "on its feet." So pleased was Mr. Henry with the result that he invited the whole crowd to the City Hotel for dinner. Did the crowd accept? Don't you think any of them refused! Three-score and fifteen souls at once took up the line of march, and in a remarkably short time they were clamoring for admittance into Harry Hamil's big dining room. The crowd was counseled to possess their souls in patience, and in a few minutes the doors were thrown open and every man of them served to a sumptuous dinner. The probabilities are, that if Mr. Henry keeps up this custom, he will never be stuck for hands when he wants to raise a barn.

An accident happened at Jesse Bolinger's saw mill in Shore's Valley a few days ago, that came very nearly costing the lives of Charles Newman and George Bolinger. These men were working on the mill when a big tree that was being cut down nearby fell in the opposite direction intended by the choppers, and it fell on the roof crushing it in and striking Messrs. Newman and Bolinger. The belt saved Charles' life, and George escaped with several severe bruises. More serious consequences would have resulted had not Jesse seen the tree coming and shut off the steam.

About a score of the little boys and girls, of this place, had the "time of their life" last Saturday evening. Saturday was the eighth birthday of Paul, son of Richard Alloway, and about six o'clock in the evening, the visiting boys and girls marched to the Alloway home, when the good time began. Ida, the mistress of the household knows just what tickles the palates of youngsters, and she had an abundance of bananas, ice cream, delicious cake, and these she served to the little people until every "last one" hollered "enough!" My! My! When we see how much enjoyment a group of youngsters can get out of an evening like this it makes us feel like being children again and munching sweet cake and bananas, until the buttons begin to fly off. Now, don't it Mr. Editor? Master Paul was the recipient of many nice gifts.
