WILL RAIN FORTY DAYS.

That is the Tradition About Sunday, St. Swithin's Day.

If tradition be true, the little rain which fell last Sunday was not so significant for itself as it was for the promise of a continuance of rain for forty days. Sunday was St. Swithin's Day. An old quatrain says of it:

"St. Swithin's Day, if thou dost rain,
For forty days it will remain;
St. Swithin's Day, if thou be fair,
For forty days 'twill rain no more."

Sunday's rain was just sufficient to have bearing on the tradition—a barely perceptible drizzle, recurring at intervals throughout the day.
