Carlisle School May Go

There is trouble on the horizon at the Carlisle Indian Training School on account of the shakeup of teachers. Many have resigned and others have been transferred to other schools in various parts of the country. Some 26 teachers will go away from Carlisle. The opinion is expressed that the removal of the old teachers, who have spent years at Carlisle to the institutions in the West, is but the forerunner of the removal of the entire school to some western point, when the next Congress meets.

"I had run down in weight to 135 pounds, and coughing was constant, both by day and by night. It is reported here that a valuable horse was killed by lightning for Oliver Hill last Saturday evening.

Several days ago, while Rev. Powers, of this place, was driving out to see the sick, he was caught under a falling tree, near the residence of Oliver Plessinger. The wind was blowing very hard, and suddenly the branches of the tree came down upon him. One branch fell between the horse and the buggy. Another small branch came down back of his head. Another large branch came down on the hind wheels, fastening the buggy so that the horse could not go back nor forward. The horse became frightened, but the Reverend managed to get the horse from the buggy in a short time. The buggy was slightly injured, but the man and the horse escaped unhurt.

Quite a large crowd of people attended the funeral at Hill's Chapel last Sunday.
