The last ten years has been the golden age of American agriculture. More advance has been made than in twenty or thirty years in the nation's history. Land has increased enormously in value since 1896, and is destined to go higher in the farming sections. Prices for products have been good all the time and are better now than ever. If the importance of agriculture and the farmer increases at the same ratio in the future—and it is sure to do so—the agricultural life will be considered the ideal one, and to own a good farm the very acme of felicity.
