CONGRESSMAN RIDICULES THE AMERICAN HEIRESSSES WHO WED FOR FOREIGN TITLES

McGavin, of Chicago, Says They Sacrifice Their Souls to Snobbery—Auction Block of Fifth Avenue—"Oh, Mamma, Buy Me That!" Girl Says, and It is Done, in McGavin's View—Every Day a Bargain Day in New York, Whether For a Yard of Ribbon or a Pound of Flesh.

Washington, D. C.—Declaring that the women concerned "sacrifice their souls and their honor on the altar of snobbery and vice," Representative Charles McGavin, of Chicago, took occasion in the House to denounce "the international marriage habit" on the part of American heiresses. It was only a few days ago that Representative Sabath, of Chicago, introduced a bill to tax all property expropriated through marriage settlements made on account of such alliances. Mr. McGavin, who is a native of Illinois, got to Congress by defeating Carter H. Harrison's brother. "In thinking of these numerous weddings," he said, "I wondered what the early pioneers who battled with the Indians, challenged the forest and braved the winter's winds and snows to establish a Government where manhood might be recognized for its true value, instead of for the accident of birth, would say if from their graves they could look back and see so many of the women of this country sacrificing their souls upon the altar of snobbery and vice. "I have no reference to any particular girl, nor have I prejudice against all of these titled men, for some of them are worthy to grace any home; some of them have added to the honor of their names and to the glory of their countries. I have reference only to those who have a monopoly on their eyes and an idiotic look upon their faces—those who have neither the disposition to be good nor the ability to do harm. "A bill has been introduced in the House by one of my colleagues from Chicago to levy a tax upon all dowries and upon their titles. I am not here to advocate the passage of that bill or to oppose it, but my curiosity has been aroused to know to what committee it might have been referred. The Committee on Foreign Relations might do so, or the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce might also be appropriate. "But on further thought and examination I found it had been very properly referred to the Ways and Means Committee, inasmuch as it sought to levy a tax. Then I was more curious to know whether the present tariff schedule included dukes, earls, lords and counts, and finding that these things were nowhere mentioned, I thought it might be proper for the customs officers to classify them like frogs' legs, as poultry, for it is the general opinion among Americans that they are a species of geese. "We upon this side of the House have in recent years referred triumphantly to the fact that, as between this and other nations, the balance of trade was in our favor, but nowhere in the summary can be found a reference to such trades as these, where sold and frayed nobility is exchanged for a few million dollars' worth of the lamb of Wall Street with a woman thrown in to boot. Every day seems to be a bargain day in the great city of New York, whether it be for a yard of ribbon or a pound of flesh; whether it be upon the retail counter of Broadway or the auction block of Fifth avenue. "There was a time when wealthy Americans traveling in Europe were content with buying costly fabrics and paintings by old masters of whom they knew nothing, but now they buy something even more costly but less valuable. When the wealthy girls traveling with their parents abroad were content with a few words of French and Italian, they now buy a title, a name, a name that they can use in their own country, and they are willing to pay for it. "I am not here to advocate the passage of that bill or to oppose it, but my curiosity has been aroused to know to what committee it might have been referred. The Committee on Foreign Relations might do so, or the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce might also be appropriate. "But on further thought and examination I found it had been very prop-

500 American Girls, With $204,000,000, Have Wed Titles

New York City.—More than 500 American girls have married titled foreigners, and a careful statistician has calculated that a trifle more than $204,000,000 has been taken overseas through cupid's influence. This amount does not include the $12,000,000 fortune of Miss Gladys Vanderbilt, who married Count Szechenyi, of Hungary. The record of international marriages is appalling, and the divorce court history of the past few years teems with the names of titled foreigners who married rich American girls. There are few of these cases in which the American wife did not bring the suit either for separation or divorce. Some of the matches have been love matches, and in these instances, with few exceptions, the American wives have been happy. But these

The existence of slavery in the Philippines was discussed. A bill providing for a new immigration station at Philadelphia was passed. In the Senate an attempt was made to have the Harvester Trust investigation called off. There was a lively tilt between Representatives Randall, of Texas, and Dalzell, of Pennsylvania.

The Senate Commerce Committee reported favorably the bill to provide a revenue cutter for Key West at a cost of $250,000.

The Face of the Enemy.

By WILLIAM H. HAMBY.

In his restless slumber the Youth beheld a terrible Vision. He was a monster wearing a loose, dark hood and a trailing cloak, black as night. In its bony hand it carried a scythe, and it moved with awful, silent swiftness.

As it passed, its garments brushed close to the Youth, and he awoke, trembling with a great fear. "It was the Reaper whose name is Death," he said.

Not many days after the Youth saw the Vision again—this time in the light of day. As its trailing cloak of blackness fanned his face in passing, his heart cried out in agony. He knew the Monster was bearing away her loved above all others—she who had given him life.

Then the Youth thought bitterly of the Monster, but feared it with an exceeding great fear. Once more the Monster passed. The Youth was a man now, and as he felt the rush of the dread, dark silence, he stooped over a cradle with a great yearning in his heart. It was empty.

The man hated the dark Vision, and never thought of it but in bitterness and dread.

He was middle-aged now, strong and self-reliant—a conqueror among men. But again he felt the approach of the dark-hooded Vision and cried out, "No, no; have mercy this once!"

But it passed swiftly, and the man saw the fair, green earth turn to leaden ashes under his eyes, for the Monster had borne away her whom he loved even more dearly than his mother.

After that, with grim, silent lips and hard, burning eyes, the man went on his way, hating, more than ever before, the cruel, heartless Monster.

At evening the Man, tired after a long journey, lay down to rest. Directly he beheld a beautiful Vision! approaching. His face was wondrous fair, and filled with ineffable sweetness and compassion. The Man sprang up and ran forward. "O Vision," he cried, holding out his hands, "O beautiful Vision, I've dreamed of you all my life. Who are you? From whence are you come?"

"The Vision smiled. "You should know. You have seen me many times before."

"Never!" declared the Man positively. "I never saw you before."

"At least," said the Vision, "you have seen my dark mantle."

"But you wear no cloak," said the Man in astonishment.

"I never wear it, but it is always in my mind."

"What is it, then?" asked the Man.

"Fear," answered the Vision, in pitying tenderness. She held out her hand with a feeling of great security and perfect joy. "And who are you?" he asked, as they moved swiftly away.

"Down here," replied the Vision, "I am called Death."

"But over there?" asked the Man, with upturned face.

"I am Life."—Home Herald.

A Few Favorite Dishes of Counties.

There is scarcely a county in England that has not a favorite common dish among its people.

In rural Essex one meets with a combination of stewed rabbit and raspberry jam.

Whenever apple pie makes its appearance on a Yorkshire dinner table cheese finds a place there, and the two are eaten together.

Rabbit pudding is a dish only to be encountered in Norfolk, which county believes in stuffing a turkey with chestnuts. Lancashire has a parsnip pudding peculiarly its own, as well as a kind of cake made of fat bacon and oatmeal.

The little villages dotted about the mud flats of Essex are the only places in England where clam soup forms an article of diet.

A Cambridgehire man usually fries and eats apples and sausages together. He also is fond of making jam of his surplus marrow; but in Leicestershire they would be pickled.

The practice of eating sweets with meat is to be found in Devonshire, where the natives rarely think of eating fried bacon without sugar of some sort, either powdered, white or brown, says Home Chat.

Reduced Criticism.

After a concert at Manchester, England, Joachim, the great violinist, whose death occurred recently, was at the railway station waiting for a train.

A respectable looking man, apparently a navy in his best clothes, paced at his side a while watching him with close interest. Finally he asked for a light and got it. As he drey at his pipe to get it started he looked Joachim full in the face. Then, just as he was about to go, he tapped the violinist's chest impressively.

"But Paganini was the man," said he.

Joachim used to say, declares the narrator of this story, that he never felt so small in his life. Whole pages of learned musical criticism had never begun to whittle him down so fine.—Youth's Companion.

Moorish Idea of Beauty.

The amiability of Moorish women strikes me greatly. I visited some the other day, and they were full of kindly interest. They liked my fair hair, they liked my clothes; one old crone suggested how lovely I should be were I to paint my cheeks a brilliant red, stain my under lip coal black, adding three black verticle lines on my forehead and one in the middle of my chin, also stain my teeth with walnut juice, my hands with henna! I therefore rubbed my cheeks with my handkerchief till they turned crimson; that amused them highly, and they laughed and said I needed no paint, but did need henna and blacking!—National Review.

Pantry Cleaned

A doctor said: "Before marriage my wife observed in summer and country homes, coming in touch with families of varied means, culture, tastes and discriminating tendencies, that the families using Postum seemed to average better than those using coffee."

"When we were married two years ago, Postum was among our first order of groceries. We also put in some coffee and tea for guests, but after both had stood around the pantry about a year untouched, they were thrown away, and Postum used only."

"Up to the age of 28 I had been accustomed to drink coffee as a routine habit and suffered constantly from indigestion and all its relative disorders. Since using Postum all the old complaints have completely left me and I sometimes wonder if I ever had them."

Castro's Star.

In spite of the hostility of the whole world President Castro of Venezuela manages to keep himself in power in his own country. He is a little man who wears a high limp. His Jameses were caused by a bullet wound received when he was making his theatrical campaign for the presidency.

On one occasion Castro was sitting out a dance with the wife of the American minister. As was Napoleon, he is a firm believer in the influence of astronomical bodies over the destinies of men. On the night in question the sky was radiant. One big star was so brilliant that it attracted the lady's attention.

"Look at that star, Mr. President," she said. "It seems to be watching over the whole earth."

"That is true," replied Castro gradually. "That star is my star. When that star shall fall I shall fall."

There was an arrogance in his tone that left no doubt in the mind of his hearer that he was fully convinced as to the accuracy of his belief. He made this statement several times, and his star still seems to be in the ascendant.—Chicago Tribune.

Robbing the Mississippi. A curious result of scientific study of the Blue Ridge Mountain in region of North Carolina and Virginia is the showing that the Atlantic is slowly gaining some of its waters that have heretofore flowed toward the Mississippi.

This arises from the fact that the Blue Ridge, instead of being a great with strong slopes on each side, is an escarpment separating a mountain inland upon the north-west from a lower upland on the south-east, and the high-level head waters of the stream that flow toward the Mississippi are continually losing length by the retreat of the escarpment through the retrogressive erosion of the low-level head waters of the Atlantic-sloping streams.

It is a practical point of view, of course, the change is very gradual. But by such change many of the earth's features have been formed.

Too Much Compatibility. Judge Boswick, of Columbus, O., recently upheld a woman in her refusal to tell her husband the name of her lover.

"Were the witness' age pertinent, I should require her to give it," he said; "but in this case, as in many cases, it is not pertinent, and, therefore, in refusing to state her age the lady is quite within her rights." Speaking of Judge Boswick the other day, a Columbus man said:

"He is a remarkable person. He should have been a novelist. As this decision about age shows, he has a peculiar sympathy with the feminine character. He understands it."

"One day I heard him talking about divorce. He was discussing the incompatibility of temperament plea on which so many divorces are granted.

"He said compatibility was often a bad thing, too. He said there was once a girl who, after listening to a young man propose, said to her father and mother: 'No, James, I cannot marry you.' 'James looked frightened, hurt, displeased. 'Why not?' he asked. 'There is too much compatibility of temperament about us, James,' said the girl, her lip curling with faint scorn. 'Too much compatibility! But isn't that a good thing?' asked the puzzled young man. 'Not always,' she answered. 'For instance, judging from the size of your income, if we were married I should undoubtedly insist on motives of economy in our dispensing with my servant and my own housework, and in your compatibility you would undoubtedly let me do it, James.'—Washington Star.

Gum and Thought. One thing is certain—you cannot chew gum and talk at the same time with any degree of success. You may chew gum and work mechanically, you may read with gum in your mouth, and perhaps not miss anything in the author, but when it comes right down to good hard mental effort, you cannot concentrate and achieve the best results of which you are capable while your jaws are working unnecessarily. That champing is just so much wasted energy, and as such dissipates your force and keeps your thinking powers reduced to the lowest point.

Just put it down in your notebook as a fact that no man can think deep, logical or well-balanced thoughts while his jaws are working overtime.—Chicago Tribune.

Let Us Forget. In the good old kaffir corn days of Blaine county, when Uncle John Dillon, the Geary banker, and County Clerk Tyler hauled cedar posts to El Reno and Oklahoma City and sold them to buy beer for their families, they would go to hear a good old preacher, who was a post hauler with them. This good old brother in his prayers would thank God for his goodness to them, and one season, when he was especially thankful for a good crop raised, but not forgetful of the poor, he said: "Dear Lord, lest in days to come we forget, we thank thee, O God, for the cedar in the canons,"—Watonga Herald.
