Peril Of The Collar Button. A few days ago the news columns his brain. On the table by the side carried the story of a man who was atricken with a serious case of vertigo while groping under the bed for his clusive collar button. Still later appeared the story of an East-ern man who was overcome by heart failure after a viclent struggle with a refractory button that refused to connect a tight cultar. In each of these instances the victim was a stout man of full habit and presumably of apoplectic tendency.

The collar button has been the plaything of the flippant writers for a long time. Its amusing pranks, its almost human perverseness, its power of effacing itself when most wanted, have united in a striking illustration of the moral obliquity of law?" asked his father, "It ain't what it's cracked up to becomes an adjunct to tragedy, it can no longer hope to be regarded in an amusing light.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Muzzling The Cannon.

Two recruits stationed at a fort overlooking the sea were examining one of the fort guns. One suggested that they should let it off, adding that nobody would be any wiser. They loaded the gun, and one of them said he would hold a bucket over the muzzle to drown the sounds so that they would not be heard The gun was fired, and the shell and bucket, with the soldier clinging to it, went flying gayly out to sea. An officer immediately rushed up to the remaining soldier to inquire the cause of the commotion.
"Where is Murphy?" he yelled.

"Gone for a bucket of water, sir," coolly remarked the soldier.

"And how long will be be?" roared the officer, "Well," said the soldier, "if he comes back as quick as he went he's due any minute."
