A remarkable experiment in connection with the shell-forming mechanism of the hen is described in a recent issue of Science. A surgical operation was performed upon a hen by which the feces or excrement were made to pass through the canal where the egg ordinarily receives its shell coating. In this instance the fecal matter or manure as soon as it reached the proper place was coated with a shell and then passed from the hen, showing that the shell-making operation is independent of the rest of the egg-producing process. Farm Gate.

On a farm often a long gate is necessary, but it is very heavy and hard to open and shut. The sketch which I send is an easy way to overcome the difficulty of handling the heavy gate. Take a piece of 2x4 about three feet long and size one end down until it will enter the hub of an old cultivator wheel. After the wheel is fastened to the end of the 2x4, fasten the latter to the gate with two or three strong bolts. Place the 2x4 and wheel just high enough so the gate will clear the ground when swung to one side. When the gate is shut the wheel stands between the end of gate and the post as shown in illustration. A child can open and shut it without difficulty .-- Mrs. Blanch Cubine, in the Epitomist,

The Thoughtful Cow Owner.

The thoughtful cow owner certainly will not want to keep in his dairy herd any cow that does not show a reasonably good profit. The man that finds out just exactly what each cow is doing will not hesitate to dispose of every cow that is not paying for what feed the is consuming, plus the cost of caring for her and a reasonable per cent of profit on the investment.

I must say that it is really astonishing that after this matter has been discussed at so many different times at different places for about the last quarter of a contury, that every investigation that is made by an excut them down and done everything periment station in any State shows a great percentage of dairy cows that do not pay any profit. Still it is well known that dairymen do not keep cows for pleasure or health. The fact is they do not take time to da, a very bad pest. You will have plan, or pains to apply good business

The thoughtful cow owner will not be long delayed in discovering his most profitable cows and will only use them in breeding for dairy purposes. The dairy cow that does not yield any profit should be prepared for the beef market and sold at once. She should not be bred and the owner ought not to wait for her to dry up at the end of her lactation, because if she is not giving any profit what is the use of keeping her any longer than is necessary to get her in shape for the butcher. It is because dairymen do not actually study out these cow problems that there are in this country to-day as many cows that are unprofitable to the men that own and care for them .- Indiana Farmer, Vetch Hay as Feed For Cows.

Common vetch is a great nitrogen gatherer and is used as a farm crop in many different ways. In some localities it has proved valuable as a catch crop and also as a cover crop in orchards. In France it has been grown to furnish honey-making material for bees. In the eastern United States the common vetch has not proved to be so valuable as other legumes, but in western Oregon it has become a standard stock feed and is used as hay, sllage, pasture and as a soiling crop. It makes a very palatable hay and dairy cattle prefer vetch silage to that made of red clover. On some farms vetch is replacing clover in the regular rotation. Vetch is usually sown in the fall with wheat or rye to support the stalks, and is cut for hay when the seed begins to form in the pods, From two to four tons of hay to the
