CHESTY PLAYERS MAKE GOOD | DAHLEN IS LEAGUE VETERAN

mage.

Cobb, Latham and Kelly Among Those of Swell-Headed Kind That Made Good.

Ty Cobb has been reviled more than any other player I know of, writes a of being the veteran of the National well-known New York baseball author- league in point of continuous service He is called chesty, a swell head, grand stand player, a murdering pase runner, and other names enough for a stranger to the game of baseball to think the greatest ball player who ever lived to be a dyed-in-the-wool ruftian of the worst stripe.

Now, Ty is chesty, cocky and fresh, but those are the qualities that make the best ball players. Cobb was the !reshest kid who ever broke into big league class, is what every Detroit player says who was with the Tigers when Cobb first joined them. But it was that chestiness and nothing else that enabled him to climb to the top of his profession where he stands preeminently now, and there will be no one to push him off that high pinnacle until he himself says so.

And what is chestiness but the feel ing one has that one is just as good if not better than any one else in the line of business one follows.

Cobb felt it in his youthful bones that he was as good a player as any one on the Detroit team and made good the feeling imbued in him that caused the expansion of chest he is accused of. Chestiness is one of the most promising traits a youngster can of 1890, and in 1891 played his first show, and he does not want to lose it, either, as he gets older.

Ty Cobb newer wore a No. 4 cap will warrant. There is only one player that I remember of who ever did and was a good ball player, and that was Jack Glasscock.

Cobb's brain expands with his chest and for the same reason. He knew at the start and knows now that he is as good as they make 'em, and therefore, why wouldn't he expand, mentally and physically? All this knocking of Cobb, too.

lieve it he felt bad. I was born down in Georgia and began playing the game while at school. As I recall it, I always played the same way, took all the chances there were, and ran all the time. Lots of people now think that is good baseball, but the fellows with whom I played refused for a long time to think so. In fact at the finish of the game, our team usually was divided into two factions, with Cobb on one side and all the others on the other. I had ideas regarding how to play the game but none of us ever had seen much baseball, and we had to think it out for ourselves.

One of the big wonders to me is that I as a boy, made plays the same way, and for the same reasons that the star ball players of the big leagues were making, and I never had heard of them. After I got older I commenced to watch the professional team in the Southern league play. anything like that, but because I loved of it every time there was a game.

I left home to show up the league, and a few weeks later Jack Grim bought me. The club I was with sold me to Grim I think for $8.50, the price of the car fare home and my hotel bill. I had been doing the same thing again, and my overzealousness cost me the position. I was slated to go way down into the bushes and perhaps I would have stayed there and never come out but for the fact that Detroit had some sort of a string to me and Grim could not get me. So I went to Detroit.

MACKAY TO MOVE TO FRANCE

Racing Laws, Found to Be Too Stringent, Impels Him to Join Other

Clarence H. Mackay who, several years ago, secured a ten years' lease on the Kingston farm of R. L. Baker of Lexington, Ky., at the big figure of $10,000 a year, has decided to remove his entire breeding establishment from Kentucky to France.

He has notified Mr. C. F. Hill, manager of the farm, to have all the horses, about twenty-seven brood mares and the imported stallion Meddler, ready to ship by October 1. Mr. Hill will go with the horses and assume charge of the new breeding plant.

It is believed here that Mr. Mackay's order is because of the stringent laws in New York. W. K. Vanderbilt. Frank Gould, Harry Payne Whitney, Herman B. Dwyer and other New York millionaires are now racing in France.

Ditcher in Peculiar Play. Pitcher Mathewson made a most peculiar and unsual assist in a recent game with Pittsburg when Adams was at bat. The batter missed the third strike and the ball hit Myers on the chest protector, bounding out to foul ground. Myers lost track of it. Matty seeing the ball lying on the ground ran over, picked it up and threw the runner out at first. It is not often that a pitcher can get an assist on a strike-out.
