Solves A Deep Mystery.

"I want to thank you from the bottom of my heart," wrote C. B. Rader, of Lewisburg, W. Va., "for the wonderful double benefit I got from Electric Bitters, in curing me of both a severe case of stomach trouble and of rheumatism, from which I had been an almost helpless sufferer for ten years. It suited my case as though made just for me." For dyspepsia, indigestion, jaundice and to rid the system of kidney poisons that cause rheumatism, Electric Bitters has no equal. Try them. Every bottle is guaranteed to satisfy. Only 50c at Trout's drug store.

Favor "Direct" For Senators.

By a vote of 10 to 2 the senate committee on judiciary Monday decided to report favorably to the senate a resolution providing for an amendment to the constitution directing that senators be elected in each state by a direct vote of the people. For the first time in the history of the senate this action by the committee will bring the proposition directly before the senate.

Kind Friends.

I wish through the FULTON COUNTY NEWS to extend my most hearty and sincere thanks to my friends in Brush Creek Valley, who so kindly sent me post cards, to the number of 52 on my birthday, January 9, 1911.

T. H. WALTERS, 107 3rd St., Altoona, Pa. John K. Tener was inaugurated on Tuesday of this week as governor of this State.

IT GROWS HAIR.

Here Are Facts We Want You To Prove At Our Risk.

Marvelous as it may seem, Rexall "93" Hair Tonic has grown hair on heads that were once bald. Of course, in none of these cases were the hair roots dead, nor had the scalp taken on a glazed, shiny appearance.

We want you to get a bottle of Rexall "93" Hair Tonic and use it as directed. If it does not relieve scalp irritation, remove dandruff, prevent the hair from falling out and promote an increased growth of hair, and in every way give entire satisfaction, simply come back and tell us, and without question or formality we will hand back to you every penny you paid us for it.

Aeroplane Safeguard Soon to be Produced

Compared with aviation, the man who makes a parachute jump or stirs ingredients in a factory where nitroglycerine is made, has a safe job with every prospect of dying of old age. In the development of no other modern art has so large a proportion of fatalities occurred, and in few, so many deaths in the same length of time. The story of 1910, with all the glory of its long distance and altitude records, is dimmed, when one contemplates the fearful price in human life at which it has been purchased.

Fifty-three enthusiastic airmen more than one for each week in the year, have paid the penalty of their daring.

The closing hours of the year crowned the long roll of sacrifice with the loss of three of our best airmen; men who not only were leaders on this side, but holders of world's records. Johnstone with the high altitude record at the time of his death, then Moisant, who last October earned the international trophy for speed, and Hoxsey, who carried the altitude record even yet higher. The gloom which this galaxy of death has brought to all interested in aviation is in no degree lessened by the thought that they all perished in exhibition flights, and that their desire to interest and satisfy a gaping throng was the occasion of their death.

The causes in a majority of cases have been so similar as to make evident a condition in construction of aeroplanes which must be corrected before any reasonable degree of safety will be insured. There is, however, some reason to believe that the secret of the chief cause of disaster has been recently discovered, though not yet made public. The principle is so simple that, as is usually the case, the wonder will be it was not observed months ago, and when the time comes to announce it, will be instantly understood. It is devoutly to be hoped that these expectations will be fulfilled, for unless some radical safeguarding can be accomplished in the very near future, the loss of life this year will certainly be appalling on account of the hundreds of planes now building or ordered for early delivery.—H. H. Windson, in the February Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Measles a Dangerous Malady.

Measles is a dangerous malady. Although the mortality may not be high, except in children under 2 years—more of whom die from it than from any other contagious disease—yet it causes many deaths from pneumonia, pleurisy and consumption, which follow in its wake.

The cause of the disease is supposed, to be due to a germ conveyed by discharges from the nose and throat, and possibly by pieces of skin thrown off from the body during the peeling process. It is thought that it may be carried by the clothing and hands of those coming in direct contact with the skin. It is catching from the earliest symptoms until after peeling of the skin is completed, but is most dangerous during the height of the eruption of the skin.

Patients suffering from mild attacks can transmit the disease equally as well as those with severe attacks. Children having it in such mild form—the parents believe it is nothing worse than a slight cold—continue in school, play in intimate association with their fellows and spread the disease. Therefore any child with soreness of the eyes and cold in the head, with or without a cough, should be kept by itself until a doctor is procured and can positively state the child has not measles.

The wrong method is to give home remedies; to allow the child to come in contact with others, until more serious symptoms develop; then the doctor is sent for, but too late, as the other children who have not had the disease have already caught it. Complete separation of the sick from the well must be maintained until the skin has peeled.

The utensils used in the sick-room must be disinfected or boiled before they are removed; and the caretaker or nurse should not go into other parts of the house, but where this is impossible, the clothes and shoes should be changed and the hands washed with a disinfectant and then scrubbed with soap and water.

Inexpensive muslins should be cut up for handkerchiefs and burned when soiled. All bed-clothes, body clothes, towels, etc., that come in contact with the patient should be soaked for a half hour in a pail of water, to which one-half pound of chloride of lime has been added, before they are removed from the room. They should still be kept separate from other laundry and washed as soon as possible in boiling water.

The well members of the family in the same house or apartment will not be allowed to attend school or any place where children are likely to assemble. It is a crime to try to hide a case of contagious disease from the health authorities to save trouble, thereby causing in your neighbor's family sickness, suffering, expense and possibly death.
