

Barnhard Explains Capitol Statuary. George Gray Barnard, who wrought the two beautiful groups that have been placed on either side of the main entrance to the State Capitol, addressed the House of Representatives. He spoke on the dignity of labor and the brotherhood of man, which, he said, he had tried to exemplify in marble. Labor, he said, is the best thing in life and the best friend of man. The vision of the figures in the two groups, he said, came to him eighteen years ago while walking along a lonely road. It was storming and lightning was playing about him. He thought of the men of sorrow, of joy and of hope. "I lived with the groups," he said, "but did not put them to paper but kept them in my mind until my native State called me to do sculpure work for this beautiful Capitol. 'Do as you will' I was told and I gradually put my vision into marble." The groups, he continued, show two sides of life. One group represents the burdened souls who cannot follow the laws of brotherhood; the other, love, fraternity and labor. Speaker Cox appointed a committee to adopt plans for the formal acceptance of the groups.

Thompson Toll Road Bill Is Defeated.

The Thompson toll road bill, which was the original road bill in the present session of the Legislature, was defeated decisively in the Senate. The measure was intended to relieve certain counties of the State which are toll riden by creating a fund and empowering the State Highway Department to purchase and condemn all toll roads and make them free. The bill would have required a half mil-Hon of dollars to carry out its provision for the ensuing two years.

FEW AGREE ON CLOSE PLAYS

Players Sitting on Bench-Scorer is Criticised.

Ball players will always find objections to the scorer who sits in the press box. No matter whether that scorer has a sublime knowledge of baseball or whether he is just tackling the rudiments of the game, he'll draw the criticism just the same.

Diamond Stars Hit Often, Yet Continue to Hug Plate-Unable to Move Out of Danger.

Why is it that some people are so constituted that when standing on a high building or at any upper story window it is with only the greatest restraint that they keep themselves from jumping? Why this desire to fling oneself to certain destruction? There are other similar elements in other makeups that are no less certain to bring dire results.

One of these comes in baseball, and no fewer than three of the real stars of the two major leagues are victims of a strange force that may ultimately lead them out of baseball forever.

Ordinarily when a batsman grabs up bat and steps to the plate he is cautious about getting hit by one of the shoots that are served up to iim. One that looks too close for comfort causes him to fall back, and in hundreds of players this tendency, this involuntary movement due to the innate desire for self-preservation, leads the batter to shyfoot. However, the three players referred to are not of this kind.

Frank Chance, the leader of the Chicago Nationals, is one of the ball play ers who when poised at the plate looking over the slants of the opposing pitcher, cannot get out of the way when they see a pitched ball coming at them. Some unknown force holds him motionless. He is aware of the fact that the sphere is traveling toward him, and he realizes his danger, but try as he will he is held motionless. On several occasions Chance has been crecked on the head, and with bad results.

Jake Stahl the Boston American irst sacker, who retired this season, had a stripe of the same whatever-it-is in his system. He was always glued to the spot when the ball started for him. He, too, felt chained to the ex act position in which he stood, and several times he suffered in consequence of this strange mesmerizing in fluence power the approaching ball had over him, Syd Smith, the catcher acquired from Atlanta by the Cleveland Americans is the third of these players.

EVILS OF SOCIAL DRINKING

English Statesman Says Greatest Difficulty is to Entertain Publicly Without Liquor.

Sir James Haslett, member of parliament for Belfast, speaking at a meeting held in London presided over by the Archbishop Canterbury, gave the following important testimony which we commend to the statesmen and public men of the United States: "My lord bishop, it is with very great pleasure that I rise to propose that the best thanks of this meeting be given to you for presiding on this occasion. I think you are the right man in the right place. The church must lead if we are to have a heaithy influence in society. As a stranger amongst you, I have had very great pleasure in hearing all that has been said in regard to total abalinence.

may say that I drank it in from my mother's breast-I have never tasted drink, and, what possibly is not an easy matter, have never offered it to others. The greatest difficulty we have is in the social intercourse of life-to entertain publicly, as a public man, without drinking. So strong are social habits that you have raised against you all the weapons that sat ire and evil communication can possibly find. You are called 'mean,' and 'niggardly,' and a hundred other things. I think, my lord, that the change must come from the women They must act as a lever in this matter, though I do not know very well how they are to do it. It was one of my duties, as the mayor of Belfast, to entertain the representatives of royalty, and it was a difficulty with me how could do it without drink. Unfortunately, the lord lieutenant dropped upon me just the week after I was ap pointed. That difficulty was greater, I think, than I might have been able to withstand; but I had then my wife with me, and she said; 'Well, you had better resign your office.' We carried it through as best we could. I trust that the recollection of that may still brighten her life in the other world But it is the difficulty of social life that you must seek to unravel. You cannot do it by legislation. I am bound to say that when I waited upon. the lord liqutenant and told him about

"But the work of a baseball team on such a trip should not be taken too seriously," Mack adds very properly. "The players consider them selves on a picnic, following a season that has been anything but that sort of an affair, and it does not take many days for them to fall off. They do not and in consequence lose form."

Connie concluded by saying: "There next fall; the rules won't permit it,' that the Athletics are to be on the
