BRITISH ARMY IS DEMORALIZED

Officers Resign Rather Than Fight Ulster.

THE KING AS PEACEMAKER.

Crisis Confronts the Government Hampered in the Movement Of Troops To Ulster By Lack Of Commissioned Officers.

London.—The government's military precautions to preserve order in Ulster have precipitated a crisis without parallel in the history of the British army. Rather than be placed in a position where they might be called upon to act against the Ulster Covenanters, numbers of officers have resigned their commissions.

While the War Office refuses to say how many have resigned, popular belief, based on reports from the different regiments, is that the number of withdrawals has crippled the whole military organization in Ireland and prevented carrying out the orders for moving several large bodies of troops.

Public curiosity is at fever heat over the question of how the government is to deal with the resignations. The Liberal sentiment is that the seceding officers should be court-martialed. Many Conservatives argue that the situation amounts to civil war and that the officers should have liberty to choose which faction they should ally themselves with.

Summons To Roberts.

The entrance of King George on the scene as peacemaker was the dramatic event of the day. He had long conferences with the Prime Minister, Mr. Asquith, the Secretary of State for War, Colonel Seely, and several high officers and afterward summoned Field Marshal Lord Roberts, who has been much criticized by the Liberals for utterances which they construed as encouragement to the officers to refuse to obey orders.

From the palace the veteran field marshal drove directly to the War Office, where he had a long talk with the secretary for war.

In the meantime the movement of troops continued in Ireland. The center of interest shifted to Curragh, 25 miles from Dublin, where the Third Cavalry Brigade, under General Gough, and the Fourteenth Infantry Brigade, under Colonel Roit, are stationed. Gen. Sir Arthur Paget, commanding the forces in Ireland, spent the day in camp. He held a conference with 50 officers of the Curragh, Dublin, Kildare and Newbridge garrisons. It was said that orders had arrived for the dispatch of the Third Brigade to Ulster, but that these could not be carried into execution because practically all the officers had resigned. Orders for the dispatch of the Sixteenth Lancers also failed of execution by reason of the same wholesale retirements of officers.

Resigning By Wholesale.

According to some reports, the military men have unanimously refused information, but a Dublin dispatch says that the resignations from the Curragh forces number forty. Other advices place the number at 100.

The government is embarrassed by the disaffection, which even exists among the officers who continue on duty, for the army is officered from the aristocratic families and the great majority of the aristocratic class sympathize with the Covenanters.

To Serve Only On Police Duty.

London.—The Throne is throwing all of its influence on the side of conciliation, and others are also working to that end.

The leaders of the opposing sides are counseling their followers to exercise moderation and self-restraint. It is reported in Dublin that out of 76 army officers 70 flatly refused to serve in Ulster, offering to resign.

They were finally persuaded to go to Ulster, but for police duty only and with the understanding that they would not engage in hostilities against the Ulsterites.

Among those who offered their resignation is lord-in-waiting to the King.
