With Practise It Is Possible to Put One Out at a Distance of Twelve Feet.

The distance from which an average man can blow out a candle rarely exceeds three feet, remarks the New York Tribune. If he is an adept at blowing smoke rings, however, a Of course, smoke isn't necessary. An

To render the rings visible a smudge may be burned in the box, or a small dish of ammonia may be placed side by side with a small dish of hydrochloric acid, the combined fumes of these liquids making a dense smoke.

> The explanation why one can't put out the candle at 12 feet is that the energy of expulsion is conserved and practically all retained in the smoke ring, while a simple blowing has to set in motion a whole stream of air and is, therefore, wasteful,

SHOWING SEEMS CONCLUSIVE

Early Decision Urged In Order That the Present Uncertainty May Be Ended and Business Stimulated.

Washington, D. C.—The impression is becoming more widespread every day that the Inter-State Commerce Commission will grant the Eastern railroads a substantial increase in rates as a result of the convincing testimony submitted by them since 6 per cent advance case was begun.

Carriers involved may not receive the full 5 per cent, they have asked for. It is quite probable that a blanket order to this effect will not be issued, but an increase that will go far toward meeting the financial needs of the railroads seems to be assured.

And if the full amount involved in the present proceedings is denied by the commission the reason will be, it is now believed, that the commissioners have effected savings in other directions which, they hope, will compensate the roads through the conservation of the revenue received under the present rate status.

For instance, the commission has conducted a simultaneous investigation into the free or cheap service given by common carriers to private lines, to tap lines, in switching, in spotting cars and in handling of freight at terminals. All these elements have been brought into association with the advance asked for and they promise to play an important part in the findings of the board.

Representatives of the carriers who have appeared before the commission have readily granted the importance of the inquiry into these side issues: They have welcomed any readjustment of the relations of the railroads to the private lines and terminal companies that will save their companies money. but they have never agreed that the sum involved in this free service is large enough to meet the exactions outlined in the pending case.

The commission is under direct pressure and influence from every quarter to render its decision at the earliest practicable moment. The carriers are for expedition. The whole business world, in fact, is urging that the present uncertainty be ended at the earliest possible moment.

Practically all testimony, for and against the rallroads, has been submitted. The arguments will be short and the briefs will be easily digested. There seems no likelihood, therefore, that the doubt in this quarter will continue much longer.
