ABOUT READY TO GIVE UP

Conflicting War Reports Had Driven Unfortunate Man to the Limit of Endurance.

A humble-looking, middle-aged man, who had been reading the evening paper on the car, laid it aside with a sigh that made the man next to him ask:

"Did you notice the death of a relative in your paper?"

"Worse than that," was the doleful reply.

"Perhaps some great misfortune is to overtake you?"

"That's it," was the reply, with solemn shakes of the head.

"You have my sympathies," said the other after a moment.

"But it won't do me no good, although you have my thanks. Before I get home, my wife will have read this paper and she'll be all prepared for me."

"Prepared how?"

"Why, here's a dispatch from Petrograd which says that the Russians have taken a half million prisoners."

"Yes, I see."

"And that the Austrians have taken nearly a million."

"Yes?"

"And that the Germans have captured 17 towns in France."

"I see."

"And that the British and French have driven the Germans back 28 miles."

"Well?"

"I will have no sooner reached the gate than my wife will come out and wave the paper in her hand and shout until she can be heard down to the corner. The only thing I can do is to take to my heels."

"But why?" asked the other. "Why should your wife act that way?"

"Because I work in the job office of a newspaper and she holds me responsible for all the lies printed in the paper. Either the editor or I must sign a pledge to quit lying about the war or take up some other way of making a living. I've stood it and stood it until I can stand it no longer!"—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Muffling the Third Party.

Officer (to wounded soldier)—So you want me to read your girl's letter to you?

Pat—Sure, sir; and as it's rather private will you please stuff some cotton wool in your ears while ye read it?—London Opinion.

The Diplomat.

He—I really don't know how I have offended you.

She—You don't?

He—No; but will you accept my apology and let me know what it's all about?

SMALLEST DONKEY IN THE WORLD

This smallest donkey on earth was brought to New York recently, with other animals, by Hugh T. Drake of England, owner of an immense private menagerie. The donkey is five years old and stands 29 inches high at the shoulder.

Perfectly Pardonable.

"Have women the strength of mind to conduct themselves in politics like men? Could a woman, like Caesar, have refused the crown?"

"I think so," said the lady addressed.

"Of course, she might have tried it on, just to see if it was a fit."—Judge.

Proving an Alibi.

Police Judge—I believe you are a sneak thief.

Tired Thomas—No, I ain't, judge, and I can prove it.

"What are your proofs?"

"Rubber-soled shoes always make me feet sore."—Yougtown Telegram.

A Poet's Tomb.

"Under my eyes," wrote Mistral in his vein of antique tolerance, "I see the inclosure and the white dome of where, like the snails, I shall lie hid in the gentle shade. Supreme effort of our pride to escape voracious time! This forbids not that yesterday or today quickly is changed into a long forgetfulness. And when people ask of John o' Figs, of John the gaitered, 'What is this dome?' they will reply: 'That's the tomb of a poet—a poet who made songs for a beautiful Provencal maid called Mireille. They are like mosquitoes in the Camargue, scattered far and wide. But he lived in Maillane, and the old men of the countryside have seen him walking in our paths.' And then one day they will say: 'It's he whom they had chosen king of Provence. But his name lives no more save in the song of the brown crickets.' At last, at the end of their knowledge, they will say: 'Tis the tomb of a magician, for of a 16-rayed star the monument wears the image.'—The Century.
