Society Resolutions.

At a regular meeting of the Ladies Aide Society, of Hustontown, Pa., the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God to remove from our midst, after a lingering and long suffering illness, our beloved sister, Mrs. Luther Kirk, therefore, be it,

Resolved, That in her death our Society has lost a sister of whom it has just reasons to be proud; and the family, a most kind and loving mother.

Resolved, That while we deeply deplore our loss, and that while her departure will create a void in our hearts that time cannot fill—and believing the good she did here will live after her, and that her character will abide as a fragrant influence, yet we bow in submission to the divine will, knowing that he who doeth all things well hath not dealt unwisely in calling from us our sister.

Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the husband and daughter who so much need her wise counsel in life.

Resolved, That a copy of the resolutions be presented to the bereaved family; that a copy be entered upon the records of the Society, and that they be published in the FULTON COUNTY NEWS.

The Kitchen Stove.

"The kitchen stove is a sort of 'Petish' to many a woman and she adds the last straw to an already too busy day by polishing her 'cook stove' when it ought just as well have been with out that immaculate shine says Mrs. Jean Kane Foulke, Farm Adviser in Household Economics for the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture. "So many people think that a shining stove is the trade mark of a good house keeper, forgetting that a kitchen stove is not an ornament but rather a piece of household machinery. It should have care to keep it in good working order and so that it may not be unsightly as it is large and must hold a permanent piece in one of the most used rooms in the house, out after that is done every minute of time and every ounce of strength that is put on it is wasted.

"A little knowledge is a great help in giving a stove proper care and when this is used the kitchen stove will need little work to keep it not only looking clean and very bright but in good working condition and without repairs for many years. To begin with the simpler and plainer the design of any stove the better—the less trimmings, nickel or stamped iron and fret work the better, for all these will need special care to keep clean and in order. More than this such ornamentation is rarely in good taste and merely adds to the expense of the stove without adding to the usefulness. Therefore, choose a plain, neat looking stove. See that it has a good sized fire box and a deep and well made ash pan.

"A great convenience in a stove is a sort of double grate that can be turned over making a basket shaped grate in which wood may be burned or by reversing a flat grate can be had for using coal. This need not interfere with using a shaker for while it will necessitate a little care in shaking one must give a pretty sharp twist to turn the grate over from one form to the other and it is difficult to do if there is fuel in the stove. The top of the oven should be kept free of ashes and the easiest way to do this is to have a small whisk (turkey or chicken wings make an excellent brush for that purpose) with which one can readily reach between the lids and oven top. This should be done every day when using wood, but once a week will be sufficient if using coal. It is also important to keep the space beneath the oven free of ashes and dust if the oven is to heat evenly and quickly. Therefore, the stove should be set so that the vent below the oven can be readily got at and cleaned out.

"Ashes should never be allowed to heap up in the ash pan so as to touch or nearly touch the grate above for they hold intense heat and when there is fire in the stove the double heat will destroy the grate, burning it out and warping and spoiling it very quickly. I have seen stoves with the fire box almost closed with 'chokers' which have been allowed to stick and adhere to the fire brick from the coal. These deposits can sometimes be removed by a sharp blow from a hammer or with a cold chisel, but there is always the chance of breaking the fire brick when using this method. An easier plan is to occasionally put a few oyster shells in the fire which will clean the chokers out if they are not allowed too strong a foothold first.

"The sides of the stove may have a coating of some of the many stove polishes, enamels or varnishes that are for sale at any grocery store or stove shop and should only need dusting to keep in order with an occasional re-coating perhaps once or twice a year. The top however, which is in constant use may need polishing once a week and wiping every day. A good plan is, after getting a meal and when the stove has cooled off, to take a newspaper rolled into a ball and rub the top off. If the paper is moistened slightly it will remove any grease spots and then be burned up. Or if more radical measures are needed a cloth dampened with kerosene can be used and the stove top will look like new. The less stove blackening or polish one uses on the top of the stove the better, as it will rub off and burn off, making dust and soiling clothes and hands, pots and pans or anything that touches it.

"The stove pipe and chimney must be kept clean so there can be a good free draught through them and the coal in the fire box should never be piled above the line of the oven top for this same reason—also because if it is piled higher it will burn out the stove lids and warp the top of the stove by intense and uneven heating. The fire should be made up at night so that with a slight shaking in the morning the coal will be loosened and sufficient fire made to cook breakfast, after which the fire should be thoroughly shaken and freed from dead coals and ashes removed and fresh coal added. So the draught should be left on long enough to burn off the blue gas and then closed off and the fire may be left until time to use in preparation of the next meal. If this method is followed little coal will be wasted and the stove will be in good condition and ready for use at all hours and without constant and continual labor."

EMPEROR HAD TO MAKE WAY

Royal Hungarian Mail Cart Had Precedence Even Over Carriage of Ruler of Austria-Hungary.

A good story is being retold about the late emperor of Austria. Arrayed in the ordinary garb of an Alpine hunter—dark green fustian jacket and short breeches, gray woolen knitted stockings turned down below the knees, thick-soled, nailed shooting boots, and a soft gray felt hat ornamented with blackcock feathers and a chamois "beard"—Francis Joseph often spent hours unrecognized in the forest or on the mountainside.

One day, while driving from one shooting-box to another, he met the mail cart, the driver of which was lustily blowing his horn in order to clear the road.

"Get out of the way!" shouted he as he came up to the emperor's trap. "Why not get out of the way yourself, and let us pass?" rejoined his majesty.

"Because," answered the man, "the royal Hungarian mail cart gives place neither to man nor the devil!" "You are right," said the emperor, and tossed him a cigar.

BEST PLACE OF RETIREMENT

One's Own Soul Superior to All Other Situations to Man of Well-Ordered Mind.

Men seek out retreats for themselves, cottages in the country, lonely seashores and mountains. Thou, too, art disposed to hanker greatly after such things; and yet all this is the very commonest stupidity; for it is in thy power, whenever thou wilt, to retire into thyself; and nowhere is there any place whereto a man may retire quieter and more free from politics than his own soul; above all, if he have within him thoughts such as he need only regard attentively to be at perfect ease; and that ease is nothing else than a well-ordered mind. Constantly then use this retreat, and renew thyself therein; and be thy principles brief and elementary, which, as soon as ever thou recur to them, will suffice to wash thy soul entirely clean, and send thee back without vexation to whatsoever awaiteth thee.—Marcus Aurelius.

AND COST OF LIVING SO HIGH.

Lysander, a New York state farmer, was telling his troubles to a neighbor, and among other things said that the wife of the farmer who employed him was "too darned close for any use."

"This very morning," said he, "she said to me: 'Lysander, do you know how many pancakes you have et this mornin'?' I said, 'No, ma'am, I ain't had no occasion to count 'em.' 'Well,' she says, 'that last one was the twenty-sixth.' And it made me so dodgasted mad I jest got up from the table and went to work without my breakfast."

THE COOK'S OUTING.

Binks—Shafer, do you know that woman across the street?
Shafer—She certainly looks familiar. Let me see. It's my wife's new dress, my daughter's hat and my mother-in-law's parasol. Sure! It's our cook.—Philadelphia Ledger.

CRUEL SANTA.

"Well, Johnny, was Santa Claus good to you this year?"
"Now, he wasn't. He brought me a violin, and now I've got to take lessons and practice an hour every day."

BAD NEWS FOR THE DOC.

"Well, how's my patient this morning?"
"I hate to worry you, Doc, but I feel pretty good this morning."—Puck.

THE STOPPER.
