To Tell Rank Of Officer.
You can tell the rank of an American Army officer by knowing that:
A second lieutenant has an epaulette with no bar.
A first lieutenant has an epaulette with one white bar.
A captain has an epaulette with two white bars.
A major has an epaulette with a gold maple leaf thereon.
A lieutenant colonel has an epaulette with a silver maple leaf.
A colonel has an epaulette with a silver spread eagle thereon.
A brigadier general has an epaulette with one silver star.
A major general has an epaulette with two silver stars.
A lieutenant general has an epaulette with three silver stars.
A general is exceedingly rare. Thus far in our history there have been only two. They were Washington and Grant.

"Buttermilk Beats Booze."
The liquor interests claim that when a city goes dry it is infested with bootleggers, blind tigers, etc. They paint a horrible picture of drunkenness and debauchery that leads some to believe that every citizen goes around with a large funnel strapped to his back and that when he wants a drink of liquor all he has to do is to back up under a filling station anywhere on any street, arranged somewhat similar to the overhead pipes used for filling sprinkling wagons, turn a faucet, and drink to his heart's content. When we went to Phoenix, Arizona, one year ago last fall, knowing that Arizona was dry, I tried in every conceivable way to buy liquor, or at least to meet some gent who sold liquor, but failed to do so. Finally one day I saw a lot of people coming out of a place, some wiping their lips, others carrying mysterious packages under their arms. Thinks I, "Eureka," I went into the place and saw several people lined up along a counter drinking. The first thing I looked for was a rail near the floor, but failing to see one I looked at the wall and saw a large sign reading, "Buttermilk Beats Booze." The fact is that illegal sellers were as scarce as hen's teeth, and that the young men and boys did not come in contact with the demoralizing influence of the liquor traffic. And by the way savings banks deposits and building permits have increased steadily, business generally has greatly improved and crime and poverty have decreased since Arizona was "ruined" by prohibition.

WHAT CATARRH IS
It has been said that every third person has catarrh in some form. It has shown that nasal catarrh indicates a general weakness of the system, and local treatments in the form of snuffs and vapors do little, if any good. Therefore, you should treat its cause by purifying your blood with the Scott's Emulsion, which is a food and a building-ingredient, free from any harmful drugs. Try it. Scott's Emulsion, Bloomfield, N. J.
