CHAPTER XXV-Continued.

R was a good while before Rose got the key to his preoccupation. They and twened into the park at Sixty-sixth street, and were half-way over to the Fifth avenue corner at Fifty-ninth, before he spoke out.

"On a day like this," he said, "to lave sat there for two or three mortal lours arguing about stale ideas-when we might have been out here, being alive! But it must have seemed nataral to you to hear me going on like that." And then with a burst, before she could speak :

"You must remember me as the most blindly opinionated fool in the world!" She caught her breath, then said very quietly, with a warm little laugh in her voice: "That's not how I remember you, Roddy."

She declined to help him when he tried to scramble back to the safe shores of conventional conversation. That sort of thing had lasted long enough. And when they stopped and faced each other in the gray brick entrance to the building where Rose's apartment was, it was at the end of a mile or more of absolutely unbroken silence. And facing each other there, all that was said between them was

"You'll come in, won't you?" and his "Yes."

But the gravity with which she'd sttered the invitation and the tenseness of his acceptance of it, the square look that passed between them, marked an end of something and the beginming of something new.

She left him in her sitting room while she went into her room to take off her hat and jacket and take a giance into her mirror. When she came back she found him standing at her window, looking out. He didn't turn when she came in, but almost immediately he began speaking. She went rather limp at the sound of his voice and dropped down on an ottoman in front of the fireplace, and squeezed her hands together between for knees.

I don't know how much you will bave understood," he began; "probmbly a good deal. What I hope you will have guessed is that I wouldn't have come except that I'd something to tell you-something I felt you were entitled to be told. But I felt-this is what you won't have understood-I felt that I hadn't any right to speak to you at all, about anything vital, until I'd given you some sort of guaranty until Pd shown you that I was a person it was possible to deal reasonably with." She smiled, then pressed her hands suddenly to her eyes. "I understood,"

"Well then . . ." But he didn't at once go on. Stood there a while longer at the window, then crossed the room and brought up before her bookshelves, staring blindly at the ti-Mes. He hadn't looked at her even as he crossed the room. "Oh, It's a presumptuous thing to try to say," he broke out at last, "a pitifulby unnecessary thing to say, because you must know it without my telling you. But when you went away you said -you said it was because you hadn't my-friendship! You said that was the thing you wanted, and that you were going to try and earn it. And you told me that I'd never be able to see that the thing you were doing there was a fine thing, worth doing, entitled to my respect. But what I've come down here to say is-is that now, at last-I do see it.

She would have spoken then if she could have commanded her voice, and that I'll know it's true?" as it was, the sound she made conreyed her intention to him, for he wide and she clung to him. "Is it turned upon her quickly as if to inter- true, Roddy? Is it possible for a thing rupt the unspoken words, and went on with an almost savage bitterness:

"Oh, I'm under no illusions about it. I had my chance to see, when seeing would have meant something to youhelped you. When anyone but the blindest sort of fool would have seen. I didn't. Now, when the thing is patent for the world to see-now that you've won your fight without any help from me . . . Without any help! in spite of every hindrance that my idiocy could put in your way! Now, after all-I come and tell you that you've carned the thing you've set out

There was a little silence after that, She got up and took the post he had abandoned at the window.

"Why did you do it, Roddy?" she asked. "I mean, why did you want to come and tell me?"

"Why, in the first place," he said, "I wanted to get back a little of my self-respect. I couldn't get that until I'd told you."

This time the silence was longer. "What else did you want?" she asked. "What-in the second place?" "I want to earn your friendship. It's the biggest thing I can hope for. But I've no idea that you can and it out to me ready-made. I be-Heve you'd do it if you could. But you said once, yourself, that it wasn't thing that could be given. It was a thing that had to be earned. And you were right about that, as you were about so many other things. Well, I'm going to try to earn it."

"Is that-all you want?" she asked, and then, hearing the little gasp he gave, she swung around quickly and looked at him. It was pretty dark in the room, but his face in the dusk seemed to have whitened.

"Is friendship all you want of me, Roddy?" she asked again. She stood here waiting, a full minute, in silence. Then she said: "You don't have to all me that. Because I know. Ohmy dear, low well I know!"

hardly have known for his:

"If you know that-if I've let you see that—then I've done just about the last despicable thing there was left for me to do. I've come down here andyou're willing to give me-everything."

He straightened up and came a step nearer. "Well, I won't have it, I tell you. I don't know how you guessed. If I'd dreamed I was betraying that to you . . ! Don't I know-it's burnt into me so that I'll never forget -what the memory of my love must and bewildered both of them. be to you? The memory of the hideous things it's done to you? And now, after all that-after you've won your fight-alone-and stand where you Miss French, simplified the situation stand now-for me to come begging! And take a gift like that! I tell you

t is pity. It can't be anything else." There was another minute of silence, and then he heard her make a little noise in her throat, a noise that would have been a sob had there not been something like a laugh in it. The next moment she said. "Come over here, the time of the receipt of Miss Roddy," and as he hesitated, as if he hadn't understood, she added: "I want train she and the twins would take, you to look at me. Over here, where Rose had been telling off the hours there's light enough to see me by."

He came, wonderingly, very slowly, but at last with her outstretched hand she reached him and drew him around between her and the window.

"Look into my face," she commanded. Look into my eyes-as far in as you can. Oh, my dearest-" the sob of pure joy came again-"is it pity that in the cottage, ostensibly to see to it. you see? Don't you understand?"

He did understand it with his mind, but he was a little dazed, like one who | cold and rainy) and, in general, to be has stood too near where the lightning struck. The hope he had kept thing that their rather unforeseeable buried alive so long-buried alive be- needs might call for. Her real reacause it wouldn't die-could not be son was a shrinking from having her brought out into a blinding glory like first meeting with them in the confuthis without pain-exquisite, terrify- sion of arrival on a station platform, ing pain.

The knowledge she had acquired by her own suffering stood her in good riving at the cottage, he clambered stend now. She did not mistake, as the Rose he had married might have ried them both straight in to Rose, done, the weakness of his response for coldness-indifference. She led him over to her one big chair and made him sit down in it, settled herself upon the arm of it, and contented herself with one of his hands. Presently he took one of hers, bent his face down over it, and brushed the back of it with his lips.

The timidity of that caress, with all it revealed to her, was too much for her. She swallowed one sob, and another, but the next one got away, from her and she broke out in a passionate fit of weeping. That roused him from his daze a little, and he pulled her down in his arms-held her tight-comforted her. When she got herself in hand again, she got up, went away to wash her face, and, coming back in the room again, lighted a reading lamp and drew down the blinds.

"Rose," he said presently, "what are we going to do?"

'Shall we make it a real honeymoon, Roddy-make it as complete as we can?

Forget everything and let all the world be . . He supplied the word for her, "Roseolor? She accepted it with a little laugh "for a while?"

"That's what I was fumbling for." "but I can't think very he said. straight tonight. I've got it now, though. That cottage we had-before the twins were born-down on the Cape. There won't be a soul there this time of year. We'd have the world to ourselves."

"Yes," she said, "for a little while, we'd want it like that. But after a while-after a day or two, could we have the babies? Could the nurse bring them on to me and then go straight back, so that I could have them, and you, all together?"

He said, "You darling!" But he couldn't manage more than that.

At the entrance and just out of range of the elevator man, he kissed her good night."

"But will you telephone to me as soon as you wake up in the morning, so

She nodded. Then her eyes went to come back like that? Are we really learned and suffered since."

"You'll Come In. Won't You?"

CHAPTER XXVI.

He didn't come to her; just stood moon was nitogether true. They had plex and baffling considerations, that shirking that. Hadn't we better behere, gripping the corner of her book- great hours-hours of an emotional in their honeymoon became a success. gin?" ise and staring at her silhouette, tensity greater than any they had It was well along in their month that which was about all he could see of known during that former honeymoon. this happened. er against the window. At last he greater by all they had learned and cald, in a strained, dry voice she'd suffered since-hours that repaid all that suffering, and could not have been captured at any smaller price. But life, of course, cannot be made up of hours like that. No sane person can even want to live in a permade you feel sorry for me. So that petual ecstasy. What makes a mounwith that-divine kincliness of yours, tain peak is the fall away into the surrounding valleys.

In their valleys of commonplace, everyday existence-and these occurred even in their first days together -they were stiff, shy, self-conscious with each other. And their attempt to ignore this fact only made the selfconsciousness the worse. It troubled

The arrival of the twins, in the convoy of a badly flustered-and, to tell the truth, a somewhat scandalizedsomewhat-by complicating it! They absolutely enforced routine. And they gave Rose and Rodney so many occupations that the contemplation of their complicated states of mind was much abridged.

But even her bables brought Rose a disappointment along with them. From French's telegram, telling them what in mounting excitement. The two utterly adorable little creatures, as the pictures of them in Rodney's pocketbook showed them to be, who were miraeulously, incredibly hers, were coming to bring motherhood to her-

She didn't go to Boston with Rodney to meet them; stayed behind up to the very last minute, that the fires were right (June had come in ready, on the moment, to produce anyunder the eyes of the world. Rodney understood this well enough, and, arout of the wagon with them and carleaving the nurse and the bewildering paraphernalia of travel for a second trip.

Rose, in the passionate surge of gratified desire that came with the sight of them, caught them from him, crushed them up against her breastand frightened them half to death. So that. without dissimulation, they howled and brought Miss French flying to the rescue.

Rose didn't make a tragedy of it; managed a smile at herself, though she suspected she'd cry when she got the chance, and subjected her ideas to an instantaneous revision. They werepersons, those two funnily indignant little mites, with their own ideas, their own preferences, and the perfectly adequate conviction of being entitled to them. How would she herself have liked it, to have a total stranger, fifteen feet high or so, snatch her like that?

She was rather apologetic all day and got her reward, especially from the boy, who was an adventurous and rather truculent baby, much, she fancied, as his father must once have been, and who took to her more quickly than the girl did. Indeed, the second Rodney fell in love with her almost as promptly as his father had done before him. But little Portia wasn't very far behind. Two days sufficed for the conquest of the pair of

The really disquieting discovery awaited the time when the wire edge of novelty about this adventure in motherhood had worn off; when she could bathe them, dress them, feed them their very strictly regimented meals, without being spurred to the highest pitch of alertness by the fear of making a mistake-forgetting something like the juice of a half-orange at ten o'clock in the morning, the omission of which might have-who knew what disastrous consequences!

That attitude can't last any woman long, and Rose, with her wonderfully clever hands, her wits trained not to be told the same thing twice, her pride keeping in sharp focus the determination that Rodney should see that she could be as good a nurse as Miss French-Rose wore off that nervous tenseness over her new job very quickly. Within a week she had a routine established that was noiseless -frictionless. But, do you remember how aghast she was over the forty weeks John Galbraith had talked about as the probable run of "The Girl Up-Stairs;" her consternation over the idea of just going on doing the same thing over and over again, "around and around.

like a horse at the end of a pole?" Well, it was with something the same feeling of consternation that, having thrown herself heart and soul into the task of planning and setting in motion a routine for two year-anda-half-old bables, she should find herself straightening up and saying: "What next?" and realizing that, so said. "It's horrible that I should make far as this job was concerned, there you feel like that," she concluded. was no "next." The supreme merit of her care from now on would bebarring emergencies-the piacid continuation of that routine. There were got to be like that! There are things no heroics about motherhood-save in that, with all the forgiveness in the emergency, once more.

It was a fine relation. It was, per-But as a job, it wasn't so satisfactory. Four-fifths of it, anyway, could be stronger feeling for them than the where we'll begin!" she said. "That mild, temporary affection they could I'll never-whatever happens-walk they acknowledged this, tore up their time, for good. artificial resolution not to look at the to the contemplation of a life that letion of Rodney's about their honey- would have to take into account com- working out, though. We've been ed in Spain.

On the whole, then, leaving their perfect-was a failure.

Rose had spent a maddening sort of day, a day that had been all edges, open: What are we going to do?" trying not to let herself feel hurt over fantastic secondary meanings which it was possible to attach to some of the here, that I'd come back in a month, things Rodney had said, trying to be and that I'd stay until I'd finished all cheerful and sensible, and to ignore the work that we were contracted for, the patent fact that his cheerfulness I felt I had to do that. You underwas as forced and unnatural a thing stand, don't you?" as hers. The children—as a rule the best-behaved little things in the world consider anything else. But then -had been refractory. So, after their supper, when they'd finally gone off to sleep, and Rose had rejoined Rodney in the sitting room, she was in a state where it did not take much to set her off.

It was not much that did; nothing more, indeed, than the fact that she found her husband brooding in front of the fire, and that the smile with which he greeted her was a little too quick and bright and mechanical, and that it soon faded out. The Rodney of her memories had never done things like that. If you found him sitting in a chair, you found him reading a book. When he was thinking something out he tramped back and forth, twisted his face up, made gestures. That habit couldn't have changed. It was just that he didn't care to be natural with her! Couldn't feel at home with her! Before she knew it, she was cry-

He asked, in consternation, what the matter was.

"Nothing," she said. "Absolutely nothing. Really."

"Then it's just-that you're not happy, with me, like this." He brought

"This is Where We'll Begin!" She

that out gravely, a word at a time, as though they hurt. "Are you happy, with me-like this?" she countered. It was a question he could not answer categorically, and she did not I've been telling you. We've got to give him time for anything else, take what we can get. We've got to "What's the matter with us, Roddy?" work out the relation between ourshe demanded. "We ought to be happy. We meant to be." Her voice broke and Rodney relation. It'll probably in a sob over that. "And here we are-like this!" "It hasn't all been like this," he sald. or two, that I'd go through the whole guess that what Galbraith said was thing for, again, if necessary." She nodded assent to that, "But the rest of the time!" she cried. "Why can't we be-comfortable together? . . . Roddy, why can't you be Why natural with me? Like your old self. Why don't you roar at me, any more? it may or may not be, this relation be-And swear when you run into things? I've never seen you formal beforenot with anybody. Not even with strangers. And now you're formal with me." The rueful grin with which he acknowledged the truth of this indict- can. There's no law that decrees ment was more like him, and it cheered her immensely. She answered it with happy it'll be so much to the good. one of her own, dried her eyes, and And when we aren't . . asked again, more collectedly:

"Well, can you tell me why?" "Why, it seemed to me," he said, "that it was you who were different. And you have changed, of course, down inside, more than I have. You've been through things in the last year and a half, found out things that I know nothing about, except as I have read about them in books. So, when I remember how things used to be between us, how I used to be the one who knew things, and how I preached and spouted, I get to feeling that the man you remember must look to you now, like-well, like a schoolboy showing off."

She stared at him incredulously, "But that's downright morbid," she "It isn't you," he told her. "It's world, you can't forget. And until haps, the very finest in the world. I have made myself different. . . . ," She gave a shaky laugh. "On ap- We'll just go ahead-and see what proval!" Her eyes filled again. "Rod- happens." done with better results, for the chil- dy, you can't mean that." She came dren, by a placid, unimaginative, tol- over and sat down in his lap, and slid erably stupid person who had no her arm around his neck. "This is excite in anyone not a monster. And out on you again. Whether things pened." the other fifth of it wasn't a job at go well or badly with us, we'll work it out, somehow, together."

It was not until she heard the long. the old Rodney and Rose, planning our miraculous hours out of the account, shuddering sigh he drew at that, and honeymoon again? It wasn't quite their honeymoon, considered as an at- felt him go limp under her, that she three years ago. Will it be like that?" tempt to revisit Arcady, to seize a realized how genuine his fear had "Not like that, perhaps," he said, golden day which looked neither to- been-the perfectly preposterous fear "exactly. It will be better by all we've ward the future, complete in itself, that if their new experiment didn't hardly past the beginning, of what he come up to her anticipation, she'd tell It was not until, pretty ruefully, him so, and leave him once more. This are going forward prepared to make

It was a good while before they future, and deliberately set themselves took up a rational discussion again. but at last she said: "It will take

"Well," he said when he'd got his pipe alight, "it's the first question I asked you after-after I got my even

"I told Alice Perosini," she said, "the day before we left to come up "Of course," he said. "You couldn't what?" "Then," she said after a little silence, "then, if it's what you want me to do. Roddy, I'll come back to Chiengo for good.'

"Give up your business, you mean?"

he asked quickly.

She nodded. "It can't be done out there," she said. "All the big productions that there's any money in are made in New York. I'll come back and just be your wife. I'll keep your house and mother the children, andmaintain your status, if you don't think I'm spoiled for that."

That last phrase, though, was said with a smile, which he answered with one of his own. But with an instant return to seriousness, he said: "I've not asked that, Rose, I wouldn't dream of asking it." "There's a real job there," she persisted, "just in being successfully the wife of a successful man. I can see that now. I never saw it when it was my job. Hardly caught a glimpse of it. I didn't even see my bills; let you pay them down at the office, with all your own work that you had to do."

Miss Beach." She stared at that and gave a short laugh. "If I'd known that .. she said. Then she came back to the point. "It is a real job, and I think I could learn to do it pretty well.

"It wasn't me," he said. "It was

And of course a wife's the only person who can do it properly." Still he shook his head. But he hadn't, as yet, any reasoned answer to make, except as before, that it wouldn't work. "What will work, then?" she asked.

And this he couldn't answer. "We've just got to go ahead," he said at last, "and see what happens, Perhaps you can work it out so that you can do part of your work at home, We could move the nursery and give you Florence's old studio. And then it would do if you only came down here for your two big seasons-fall and spring." "That doesn't seem fair to you," she protested. "You deserve a real wife, Roddy; not somebody dashing in and dashing out."

"I don't deserve anything I can't get," he said. "I'd rather have a part interest in you than to possess, lock, stock and barrel, any other woman I can think of."

She came back to him again and settled in his arms. "A man told me." she said, "John Galbraith told me that he couldn't be a woman's friend and her lover at the same time, any more than a steel spring could be made soft | is far from being the voice of God. so that it would bend in your fingers, It is true that the majority may many lems of life were smeal like copper, and still be a spring. He said that was true of him, anyway, and he felt sure it was true of nine men out of a dozen. Do you think it's true? Have we got to decide which we'll

"We can't decide," he said with an Impatient laugh, "That's just what selves that is our relation-the Rose be a little different from any other. There'll be friendship in it, and there'll be love in it. Imagine our 'deciding' "There have been hours, a day that we wouldn't be lovers! But I true to this extent: that each of those will be more or less at the expense of the other. It won't spring quite so well, and it will bend a little."

After a while he said: "Here's what we've got to build on: Whatever else tween us is a permanent thing. We've lived with each other and without each other, and we know which we want. If we find it has its limitations and drawbacks, we needn't worry. Just go ahead and make the best of it we we've got to be happy. When we are

She gave a contented little laugh and cuddled closer down against him. You talk like Solomon in all his solemnity," she said. "But you can't imagine that we're going to be unhappy. Really?" His answer was that perhaps he couldn't imagine it, but that he knew it, just the same. "Even an ordinary marriage isn't any too easy; a marringe, I mean, where it's quite well understood which of the parties to it shall always submit to the other, and which of them is the important one who's always to have the right of way. There's generally something perfectly unescapable that decides that question. But with us there isn't. So the question who's got to give in will have to be decided on its merits every time a difference arises." She burlesqued a look of extreme apprehension. She was deeply and utterly content with just the situation. I can't help feeling life just then. But he wouldn't be dithat I'm taken on approval. Oh, it's verted. "There's another reason," he went on. "I've a notion that the thing we're after is about the finest thing there is. If that's so, we'll have to you have seen that I am different, that pay for it in one way or another. But we aren't going to worry about it.

> "Do you remember when you said that before?" asked Rose. "You told me that marriage was an adventure anyway, and that the only thing to do was to try it-and see what hap-He grunted. "The real adventure's just begun," he said. "Anyhow," she murmured drowsily,

"you can talk to me again. Just as if we weren't married." And there is just about where they stand today-at the beginning, or spoke of as their real adventure; they the best of it and see what happens, THE END.

Electric tanning machinery is need-

The Need of Divine Guidance

By REV. B. B. SUTCLIFFE Of the Extension Department, Mosdy Bible Institute, Chicago

TEXT-Then I proclaimed a fast . that we might afflict ourselves before God to seek of Him a right way.—Ezra 8:21.

Perhaps today as never before the Christian needs to be instructed by God as to the right way. There are three great reasons why divine guidance is needed.

I. Because of what we are by nature.

First of all are ignorant. It is unpopular, but true that "it is not in man that wniketh to direct his steps." So said Jeremlah long years ago. And history shows all too dearly that the way that seems right to a man ends in death and disaster. There is no way of knowing what will take place on the morrow or even within the next hour. An explorer or a tourist going into a strange unknown country will want guidance as to what lies before him. We take much care in securing all the information we can before starting into new territory. Many think it necessary to prepare for passing to the unknown land beyond the grave, but after all each new day brings such dangers and such opportunities that to be ready for them needs to have the feet guided into the right way. As it is not in man to direct his own steps there is a need for the guidance of one to whom tomorrow is as open as yesterday.

Then by nature man is so self-willed and self-sufficient he needs a higher intelligence than his own to guide him, This is humiliating but again history tells the truth. Ever since Cain in his self-will chose the wrong way it has been true that "the way of a man is forward and strange," as the Proverb says. Moses knew something of this when he declared in his last word to the people in Deut. 36:29, "I know that after my death ve will utterly turn aside from the way and evil will befall you."

Again we are so prone to wander from the right way. As the prophet says, "All we like sheep have turned everyone to his own way." Like sheep we wander, go astray and without sense keep on going further and further astray. "Everyone does it" seems to be sufficient guidance when we know well that the voice of the people times appear to be right, but numbers decision. This was the sedon't always count. There were four hundred and fifty prophets opposed to one, but that one, Elijah, was right and the crowd was wrong.

11. Because of the Character of the Way Before Us.

It is a difficult way for the Christian in these times. Bogs and mire are on either side and the way daily grows narrower. The master himself warns us in Matt. 7:13, 14, that "wide is the gate and broad the way that leadeth to destruction, and strait is the gate and parrow the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." So difficult is the way before the Christian, beset by the snares, pitfalls and straps of Satan, and so strewn with the allurements and attractions of the world, that left to himself he would surely come to destruction. He needs always the guidance of the one who alone knows all the difficulties and how to pass them. Not only difficult, but dangerous is the way. There are increasingly large numbers who are as infatuated with the supposed importance and self-sufficiency of man that they think there is no need for Divine guidance. But such are the days in which we live, "perilous, times," the Apostle Paul calls them, that Divine guidance is not only desirable, but imperative. Many are being swept from old moorings to drift | case had done its work out and make shipwreck. It is well for us to hasten to Jeremiah's exhortation to "ask for the old paths where is the good way and walk therein and find rest for your souls." Jer. 6:16.

III. Because of What the Lord is as Guide. He knows all the way that lies untried and unknown before the Christian's feet. He is omniscient. It was the Lord, not Moses, who led the people of Israel of old, and it is the Lord who would guide his people in safety today. A story is told of a little box from which we all may learn. During a storm a mother sought to rescue a family of six children. As the water burst open the door of her home, she tied her baby on her shoulder and took a boy of six in her arms. To her fourteen-year-old daughter she said, "you must carry one child." "Which one," said the girl. The mother looked at the two, one of four, one of two, unable to choose. Ben, her boy of eleven, said, "Ma, I'll take the little one." "The water is too deep for you," the dispairing mother said. "It's deep for true," answered the boy, "but Jesus is a tall man." They started, the mother calling to her children, but soon Ben ceased to answer. The mother and the others soon reached a place of safety. When the tide went down next day little Ben tramped to them and put his little charge into the mother's arms. Had he followed her the night before he would soon have been beyond his depth. But unconsciously he had turned aside and followed a bank that years before had marked a boundary. The water was to his waist, and a step or two on either side would have been fatal, but the child trod the narrow path in safety till he reached a house where a man came down and took the children in. The path of the Christian is beset with dangers, but he may tread it with perfect safety when he has the guidance of the Lord.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(Copyright, 1917, West

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBERS OF TOTAL ASS NENCE.

LESSON TEXT-Duniet L GOLDEN TEXT-But Danie in his heart that he would no self with the portion of nor with the wine which he

The book of Daniel, with the pr prophecies, fulfilled and unfulf one of the most interesting and in tant in the Bible. Without a gray the prophecies of this book it is lutely impossible for one to know New Testament and the times is st we live. Daniel gives an outless entire period of time from the per of supremacy to the Gentiles in Xa chadnezzar to the final overt the Gentile dominion, to the ear ment of the millenial kingion. course, character and end of Ger dominion are given. It is that no known in Scriptures as the

The book of Daniel falls in parts: Part I (chapters I hall which the prophet appears as a vinely chosen interpreter of d part II (chapters 7 to 12), in sist prophet appears as the means God, setting forth in vision dreams, the times of the Gentle book is written in two language brew and Aramaic-chapter 1dd chapters 8 to 12 (Hebrew); de 2:4-7:28 (Aramaic). The party concerns the Hebrews was wine their own tongue and the party concerns the empires of the said written in their tonene.

1. Daniel's Home Leaving in ! He was carried away to Rebels Nebuchadnezzar in the first sleast rusalem. This was a great in his own heart. He seems to have about fourteen years of and h boy who loved his home and the of God it was a great trial to be out and dragged away to a h country. It was not only a him, but doubtless to his par They no doubt were auxious a cerely prayed for him. 11. Daniel's Trials and Differ (vv. 5-13). It was the cases best of the captives to be set trained for service in the la tivity. They usually select the royal house for such trail brews names were given to which were significant. Dan

1. Change of mame. Among

"God is my judge." The sig of the name then was tist iel's life. This ma seems to have been very life and being. So the he imbibe this spirit that h he made God arbiter of his ! purposes. The object no de change of name was to e national and religious cu identify him with the heatle The king of Babylon et Daniel's appearance and but was averse to his I the same today. Nation uals are perfectly and utilize the se cy of Christian h nries, but are not willing their religion. The name a received by which he was to b in Babylon was Belieshatts means Bel's Prince. ing upon Daniel would be one, or the one whom god favors. Back of t name was Satan's attent these young men love the and become assimilated with $ en. There is much in a mi

Doubtless, parental discipling 2. His conscience tested was with reference to the lift and the king's wines. It borne in mind that col groundwork of human charm the law which must be doubt Daniel was taunfe at for his fidelity, just to women today who convictions must expe who will live godly is Cl pily in this case, however, the

of name did not make a chin position. Daniel was in Balt

he did not do as the Babyli shall suffer persecution. 3. His religious life. his refusal to ent ment and which was contrary to his Also it involved his praying the n day. This program he ried out, even when it me His praying was not door in secret. He called upa when those who were open could see him. III. His Success (vr. 14th sical health (v. 15).

Godly and temperate less The king's ment and wine will been plensant to the palate is have meant compromise of of 2. Mental growth (v. 20). times superior to his ozna always true that these th from indulgence in the page have clearer minds and are better equipped for their early those who indulge. 3. Social. Daniel stood king. No higher position could have been given him

4. Temporal. He became of the College of Wise Met minister of the nation he continued to hold three dynasties. 5. Spiritual (v. 17) Ber iel's loyalty to God, New dream was revealed to giving visions sketching tory of the world No equal has ever appear