The Third Officers' Training Camps.

With the opening of the third officers' training camps enlisted men have been given the opportunity for promotion and distinction. There has been no bar to any man mentally and physically qualified, and the young chap who enlisted or was drafted as a private now has the right to aspire to a lieutenant or a captaincy, which in the course of time may lead as high as a generalship. When war was declared it was necessary to call for candidates for officers from the outside—from schools, colleges, military academies and places where young men are given training and discipline—but now that the work of organizing a great army is fairly under way it has been found feasible and desirable to choose a large proportion of the officers from the ranks.

For months company and regimental commanders have been selecting men whose qualities would be likely to fit them for commissions. Special consideration has been given to conduct, leadership, ability to learn quickly, and especially the gift of being able to instruct others. With the candidates chosen, training schools have now been opened in each of the army divisions and others are to be started in the Philippines, Panama and Hawaii. Enlisted men assigned to the schools will be carried as on "detached duty" and will receive the pay of first class privates, or of their rank. Those who graduate from these schools will then be eligible for commissions as second lieutenants, and will be appointed as rapidly as vacancies occur.

This programme is thoroughly in accord with the spirit of our institutions, and will be the means of wiping out class distinctions.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Public Health Work, Despite Influence of Commercialism, Makes Great Headway

By DR. CHARLES H. MAYO of Rochester, Minn.

It was but a few years ago that anything relating to public health work, state or local, was regarded by many as of little use, an added burden of taxation to the people and an infringement on personal liberty. Today the work of the public health service in preventing and eradicating contagious and infectious diseases is widely recognized and appreciated. In fact, those best informed, and especially those engaged in the care of disease, the members of the American medical profession, are advocating strongly the establishment of a department of health under the supervision of a member of the president's cabinet.

Next to its establishment and the enforcement of its laws nothing is of greater importance to a government than the maintenance of the health of its people. Health has come to be generally recognized as an economic principle. Some countries maintain compulsory working men's laws, protecting the people by state accident indemnity and old-age insurance. England furnishes free medical attendance to the fairly well-to-do as a national economic feature of her government. In this country also various insurance and accident compensation laws have been put into effect. Within but a few years, through the efforts of the public health service and the lecturers sent out by the American Medical association, the people of the United States have become fairly well informed as to the possibilities of preventing disease.

People in America naturally tend to commercialism, and in a nation of this kind it is difficult to advance methods which in any way interfere with business. Commercialism, therefore, greatly hampers the work of local public health officers. The state of Minnesota, which finds it easy to raise about nine cents per capita for the care and prevention of disease in hogs and cattle, has an appropriation for health work of but three cents per capita. Even with this small amount, however, Minnesota stands fourth in the public health statistics of the United States. In many states the appropriation varies from a quarter of a cent to a cent per capita.

The legal value of a human life is commonly placed at $5,000. There is hardly a community in which an acting health officer, in the course of a year, would not be able to save at least one human life. Accordingly, cities with a population of two thousand and up should have a whole-time health officer whose compensation should be at least the value of one human life. Such an officer should be modern in his views, fully equipped and trained in public health service.

Next Great Organized Effort Must Be for Upbuilding of the Country School

By UNITED STATES SENATOR JAMES W. WADSWORTH, JR. Of New York

Life in the country has been brightened remarkably. The improved road, the rural delivery, the almost universal use of the telephone, and the astonishing use of the automobile are some of the important factors which have helped to bring this about. But none of these facilities, valuable as they are, affects the lives of people living in the country as fundamentally as the school. The man who lives in an environment which offers but comparatively meager possibilities for the development of his mind knows instinctively that he is missing something of deep and vital importance in his life; and the yearnings of human nature in this direction are so intense that that man will inevitably seek a more favorable environment for himself and his children; and no amount of effort put forth to enable him to fill his pockets with money will drive that yearning from his soul. I verily believe that the next great organized effort for the advancement of agriculture and the preservation of a thriving and contented country population must be directed toward the upbuilding of the country school. Work of this sort is in line with the highest purpose of government, and upon its successful accomplishment must rest the continued success of our wonderful experiment in democracy.

Fresh-Air School Rooms Increase the Vitality and Brain Power of Children

By DR. A. D. JONES Of New York

New York has taken the lead in providing sanitary quarters for schoolchildren. Many weakly children have been restored to health by the care taken in the ventilation of the schoolrooms. The experiment of having the children study in rooms where they have always plenty of fresh air has developed great advantages.

Windows in the rooms are lowered from the top and raised from the bottom. A temperature of about 50 degrees is maintained, and no heat is used except in the severest weather. The boys and girls are wrapped in sweaters and blankets and suffer no discomfort from the cold. One of the results obtained has been the gain in weight of pupils of open-window classes over those studying in heated rooms. Volumes of pure, fresh air roll into the rooms with none of the vital qualities impaired by artificial handling. The bracing effect of cold is stimulating to health and renders the children more able to resist infecting bacteria and disease. It prompts frequent class drills and exercises that prevent air stagnation in the rooms and enables every pupil to change his breathing zone.

Fresh air increases the vitality of the child and teacher. Children taught in the fresh air learn quickly and do not require the constant drilling necessary under the old system.

Most Hopeless Task Ever Conceived Is That of Outdistancing the Conscience

By REV. H. E. JOHNSON of Milwaukee, Wis.

In the race of life the most hopeless task that a man can possibly conceive of is the task of outdistancing conscience, the nemesis of a guilty soul.

The crying need of the world during these trying days, whether it be in the realms political, social, industrial, or the individual life, is a conscientious consideration of the relationships of humankind one with the other.

A man may strangle conscience, leave her apparently mortally wounded by the wayside, and bound on along the pathways through the jungles of life in the pursuit of selfish and sensual desires; but ere he has gone very far in his evil ways he will hear once more the familiar footfall of the nemesis of a guilty soul—conscience, like truth, crushed to earth, will rise again.

Conscience is not an enemy to be feared, but it is man's best friend. When the arrow of conviction shot forth from the bow in the hands of conscience—whether it be tipped with the dart of adversity, or sorrow, or physical affliction—sinks into a human soul, its work is not to destroy a man's soul; but rather to save it by arresting a man in his onward flight toward the jungles of eternal despair.

GREAT SUCCESS.

Christmas Drive Added Sixteen Million Names to the Red Cross Membership.

The latest reports available indicate that the Christmas Drive for ten Millions New Members for the American Red Cross has resulted in the addition of fully sixteen millions names to its roll. This number added to the more than six million members before the Christmas Campaign makes the total present enrollment fully twenty-two million. This is a magnificent fact; an expression not alone of the patriotism, but of the fine sympathy and idealism of the whole American people.

The following list of names shows that Fulton County has the spirit of patriotism now that it exhibited in the '60s.
