BUSH'S THREATS TO MAKE HAZEL SUFFER FOR HER RE-JECTION OF HIS PROPOSAL ARE FOUND NOT TO HAVE BEEN IDLY MADE

Synopsis.-Miss Hazel Weir is employed as a stenographer in the office of Harrington & Bush at Granville, Ontario. She is engaged to Jack Barrow, a young real estate agent. Mr. Bush, Hazel's employer, suddenly notices her attractiveness and at once makes her his private stenographer. After three months Bush proposes marriage. Hazel refuses, and after a stormy scene, in which Bush warns her he will make her sorry of her action, Hazel leaves the office, never to return.

"I won't tell Jack," she reflected. "He'd probably want to thrash him. And that would stir up a lot of horrid talk. Dear me, that's one experience I don't want repeated. I wonder if he made court to his first wife in that high-handed, love-me-or-I'll-beat-you-todeath fashion?"

She laughed when she caught herself scrubbing vigorously with her handkerchief at the place where his lips had touched her cheek. She was primitive enough in her instincts to feel a trifle glad of having retaliated in what her training compelled her to consider a "perfectly hoydenish" manner. But she could not deny that it and proved wonderfully effective,

"I Do Give and Bequeath."

When Jack Barrow called again, sing. Hazel told him simply that she had left Harrington & Bush, without entering into any explanation except the general one that she had found it impossible to get on with Mr. Bush in her new position. And Jack, being more concerned with her than with her work, gave the matter scant considera-

This was on a Friday. The next forenoon Hazel went downtown. When she returned, a little before eleven, the maid of all work was putting the last touches to her room. The girl pointed to an oblong package on a chair. "That came for you a little while ago, Miss Welr," she said. "Mr. Bush's carriage brought it."

"Mr. Bush's carriage!" Hazel echoed "Yes'm. Regular swell turnout, with a footman in brown livery. My, you could see the girls peeking all along the square when it stopped at our door. It quite flustered the missus." The girl lingered a second, curiosity writ large on her countenance. Plainly she wished to discover what Miss Hazel Welr would be getting in a package that was delivered in so aristocratic a manner. But Hazel was in no mood to gratify anyone's curiosity. She was angry at the presumption of Mr. Andrew Bush. It was an excellent way of subjecting her to remark.

She drew off her gloves, and, laying uside her hat, picked up a newspaper and began to read. The girl, with no excuse for lingering, reluctantly gathered up her broom and dustpan, and departed. When she was gone, and not till then, Miss Weir investigated the parcel.

Roses-two dozen long-stemmed La Frances-filled the room with their delicate odor when she removed the pasteboard cover. And set edgewise among the stems she found his card. Miss Weir turned up her small nose.

"I wonder if he sends these as a ment, sort of peace offering?" she snorted. "I wonder if a few hours of reflection has made him realize just how exceed- wasn't it?" ingly caddish he acted? And she did forthwith, squandering 40 cents on a messenger boy to deliver them to Mr. Bush at his office. She me. At least-well, read the note," wished him to labor under no misapprehension as to her attitude.

The next day-Sunday-she spent with Jack Barrow on a visit to his cousin in a nearby town. They parted, as was their custom, at the door. It was still early in the evening-eightthirty, or thereabouts-and Hazel went into the parlor on the first floor. Mrs. Stout and one of her boarders sat there chatting, and at Hazel's entrance the landlady greeted her with a star tainly a peculiar request for him to could have cursed Andrew Bush till tling bit of news: "Evenin', Miss Weir. The report of his injury was verified in the morning papers. By evening it she had gained the street, and she did had pretty well passed out of Hazel's not in the least care if her departure mind. She had more pleasant conduring business hours excited any cu- cerns. Jack Barrow dropped in about six-thirty to ask if she wanted to go with him to a concert during the week. They were sitting in the parlor, by a front window, chattering to each other, but not so engrossed that they failed to notice a carriage drawn by two splendid grays pull up at the front gate. The footman, in brown livery, got down and came to the door. Hazel knew the carriage. She had seen Mr. time. She wondered if there was some further annoyance in store for her, and frowned at the prospect. She heard Mrs. Stout answer the bell in person. There was a low mumble of voices. Then the landlady appeared in the parlor doorway, the footman behind her. "This is the lady." Mrs. Stout In-

The liveried person bowed and extended an envelope. "I was instructed to deliver this to you personally," he said, and lingered as If he looked for further instructions.

Hazel looked at the envelope. She could not understand why, under the circumstances, any message should come to her through such a medium. But there was her name inscribed. She glanced up. Mrs. Stout gazed past the footman with an air of frank anticipation. Jack also was looking. The note was brief and to the point: Miss Weir: Mr. Bush, being seriously injured and unable to write, bids me say that he is very anxious to see you. He sends his carriage to convey you here. His physicians fear that he will not survive the night, hence he begs of you to come.

Very truly, ETHEL R. WATSON.

Barrow laughed and kissed her, and the subject was dropped forthwith. Later they went out for a short walk. In an hour or so Barrow left for home,

Hazel took the note out of her belt and read it again when she reached it all. But she had done no wrong, her room. Why should he want to nothing of which to be ashamed, and sorry for anything he did. And so she could not grasp the reason for that eleventh-hour summons. But she could see that a repetition of such incidents might put her in a queer light. Other folk might begin to wonder and inquire why Mr. Andrew Bush took such an "interest" in her-a mere stenographer. Well, she told herself, she did not care-so long as Jack Barrow's ears were not assalled by talk. She smiled at that, for she could picture the reception any scandal peddler would get from him. The next day's papers contained the obituary of Mr. Andrew Bush. He had dled shortly after midnight. And despite the fact that she held no grudge, Hazel felt a sense of relief. He was powerless to annoy or persecute her. and she could not escape the conviction that he would have attempted both had he lived.

She had now been idle a matter of Nearly three months were yet days. to elapse before her wedding.

It seemed scarcely worth while to look for another position. She had enough money saved to do everything she wanted to do. It was not so much lack of money, the need to earn, as the monotony of idleness that Irked her. She had acquired the habit of work, and that is a thing not lightly shaken off. But during that day she gathered together the different Granville papers, and went carefully over "want" columns. Knowing the the town as she did, she was enabled to eliminate the unlikely, undesirable places. Thus by evening she was armed with a list of firms and individuals requiring a stenographer. And in the morning she sallied forth.

Her quest ended with the first place she sought. The fact of two years' service with the biggest firm in Granville was ample recommendation; in addition to which the office manager, it developed in their conversation, had known her father in years gone by So before ten o'clock Miss Hazel Weir was entered on the pay roll of a furnot a permanent position; one of their the street. girls had been taken ill and was likely to take up her duties again in six Hazel all the better. Never since their first meeting, and they had not been exempt from lovers' quarrels, had Jack Barrow ever spoken to her like that. Even through the telephone the resentful note in his voice grated on her and mystified her. She was chained to her work-which,

Hazel turned in beside him silently. Right at the start she found herself resenting Barrow's tone, his manner. She had done nothing to warrant suspicion from him. But she loved him, and she hoped she could convince him that it was no more than a passing unpleasantness, for which she was nowise to blame.

"Hang it!" Barrow growled, before they had traversed the first block. The squirrel and her bables were cap-"Here comes Grinell! I suppose that old cat of a landlady pointed us out. No dodging him now.'

I know what you're thinking. The Gazette hinted at some 'affair' between me and Mr. Bush; that possibly that was a sort of left-handed reparation for ruining me. If that didn't make me angry, it would amuse me-it's so absurd. Haven't you any faith in me at all? I haven't done anything to be ashamed of. I've got nothing to conceal."

"Don't conceal it, then," Barrow muttered sulkily. "I've got a right to know whatever there is to know if I'm going to marry you. You don't seem to have any idea what this sort of talk that's going around means to a man.'

Hazel stopped short and faced him. Her heart pounded sickeningly, and hurt pride and rising anger choked her for an instant. But she managed to speak calmly, perhaps with added calmness by reason of the struggle had better take a walk. We can't talk she was compelled to make for self-

Have I refused to tell you anything? Would any reasonable explanation make an impression on you in your present frame of mind. I don't want to marry you if you can't trust me. Why, I couldn't-I wouldn't-marry you any time, or any place, under those conditions, no matter how much I may foolishly care for you."

"There's just one thing, Hazel," Barrow persisted stubbornly. "There must have been something between you and Bush. You're no helping yourself by getting, on your dignity and talking about my not trusting you, instead of explaining these things."

"A short time ago," Hazel told him quietly, "Mr. Bush asked me to marry him. I refused, of course. He-" "You refused!" Barrow interrupted cynically. "Most girls would have jumped at the chance."

"Jack!" she protested. "Well," Barrow defended, "he was ilmost a millionaire, and I've got nothing but my hands and my brain. But suppose you did refuse him. How does that account for the five thousand dol-

"I think," Hazel flung back passionately, "I'll let you find that out for yourself. You've sald enough now to nake me hate you almost. Your very manner's an insult,"

Hazel seeks refuge in the far Northwest, where she obtains a position as schoolteacher and immediately after her arrival at Cariboo Meadows she gets her first glimpse of "Roaring Bill" Wagstaff. The introduction was startling, to say the least. The incident is a part of the next installment.
