A PECULIAR DISCOVERY.

On Tuesday of last week Frank Strunk and Samuel Ayers, of Jackson township, went out on a deer hunting expedition with Clark Wilson, of York county. The place they selected was on the Green Lee mountain near the Blue Spring, a desolate and barren region in the northern end of the county. The place is but seldom frequented by persons, and lies at least four or five miles from any habitation. While Mr. Strunk was watching a deer crossing it a spur of the mountain, he thought he could get a better view by climbing up a large projecting rock. He had barely reach the summit when he saw below a large cavity in which a rifle barrel, very much rusted, was standing against a rock. It was considerably bent and had the name of T. Dougless stamped upon it. The breech, with part of the tail broken off, was found in between two small stones, and the muzzle was leaning against the rock with about 15 inches of its stock very much weather beaten. The varnish and finish had disappeared evidently from exposure, while the ramrod was in the barrel. About two inches of it stuck out and was so much decayed that it broke off with but little pressure. Partly in the mouth of the cavity was the balance of the stock entirely protected from the weather, but on the under part, which rested on small rocks niches had been worn into it by frequent tramping of animals. About two feet from the stock was the powder flask and lock, both very much rusted. The latter was made by James Cresson, Jr., & Co., Philadelphia.

The theory advanced is that 15 or 20 years ago some hunter tracked a bear to this wild locality and wounded it. In the attempt to re-load hurriedly, which is evidence by the powder flask being dropped and the ramrod in the rifle, the animal came on the hunter suddenly, who, to defend himself, clubbed it until the rifle was broken. Then on the second blow the rifle barrel was hurled to the place where it was found while the hunter then gave up his life, or in attempting to crawl out of the mountain, perished. The theory is advanced that if the hunter would have succeeded in reaching his friends he would have retracted his steps for his rifle, if not for the animal, which in its day was a very fine one, having embeded in the stock 20 pieces of silver.

Shortly after the Rebellion a man from Boalsburg, Centre county, left his home for a bear hunt in this county, and as he was never heard from afterwards, it is supposed that he met his untimely fate at this place. The gun can be seen at any time at the residence of Frank Strunk, at Strunk's Mill, in Jackson township. —Huntingdon Globe.

The trial of Frank James for complicity in the Blue Cut train robbery in Missouri, has been set for January 14, and his bail fixed at $3,000. Charley Ford is to be tried for a similar offence at the same term of court.
