GLEANINGS.

The government envelope factory at Hartford uses a ton of gum arabic a week.

Husbands in Alabama can no longer carry on business in the name of their wives.

Lord Baltimore's landing place in Maryland is to be marked by a $10,000 monument.

Texas merchants complain that there are three commercial travelers to every customer.

Several women have applied to street railway companies in San Francisco for positions as drivers.

Sweet potatoes cut in squares and fried in beef gravy have been successfully introduced at many of the dinners of the season.

Miss Anna A. Sill, who founded the Rockford seminary at Rockford, Ill., thirty-five years ago, and has remained at its head ever since, has tendered her resignation.

It is understood that Mr. Abbey has engaged Sarah Bernhardt for a tour of the principal cities of this country at $1,200 a night; she to furnish her own company, and he to pay all costs of transportation.

A shoemaker at Stamford, Conn., has occupied the same bench in the same shop for so many years that he has three times worn away the part of the floor where his feet had rested, and put on a new half sole of leather over the hole every year.

Dr. L. H. Washington says that when pneumonia attacks the steady, square drinker, one who carries regularly his pint to a quart of whisky daily, the treatment comes exclusively under the domain of the undertaker, as the first case of recovery has yet to be reported.

A Southern paper advises everybody to stay at home this summer because of one great nuisance who will confront the traveler everywhere—that irrepressible individual who persists in canvassing a train to know the preferences of passengers for President.

Eli Perkins says he did not personally know Col. Hunt, of Michigan, who bequeathed him, "dose ilikanes," and the mother of "Artemus Ward" $5,000 each. "A year ago, however," he says, "I received a letter from him requesting me to send him two of my humorous works. I did so." Col. Hunt did not leave Eli anything.

Speaking on the subject of dances Rev. Father Dillon, of Easton, Pa., recently said: "I think a young girl who attends such a place puts a premium on her virtue, and parents who allow their children to go to either place an excessive amount of confidence upon the virtue of their daughters or else are not proper custodians of them."

A Maiden lane, New York, jeweler has on exhibition a brilliant ruby which weighs ten and one-half carats. It belonged originally, he says, to a rajah, from whom it was bought by a European potentate of limited jurisdiction, who gave it to a prima donna, who went to Chicago and sang, and was compelled to sell her jewels to pay her bills.

"Extra Billy" Smith, the veteran ex-Governor of Virginia, has written to a relative in Troy, New York, giving a synopsis of the events of his life. In the letter he finds occasion to say: "Although I shave with my right and write with my left hand, I feel as nervous in both that I write with great labor and difficulty." He was born two years before the death of General Washington.

The Scientific American says that most of the article sold as bear's grease is made in this way: Take of washed hog's lard 1 1-4 pounds avoirdupois, melt it by the heat of a water bath, add of balsam of Peru 2 drams, flowers of benzoin and bright palm oil 1 dram of each; stir vigorously to promote solution for a few minutes, then remove the pan from the bath, and, after repose for a short time, pour off the clear portion from the sediment, and stir the liquid mass until it begins to cool.

A Corean is so polite that if you inquire after his health he answers: "Thanks to the honor you do me in asking such a question; my health is good." A sick man says to the person who visits him: "Thanks to your visit, I feel better." If a Corean speaks to a Japanese he commences: "You are so learned," "You are so great;" and if he meets a funeral procession he stops it, and, going up to the coffin, says: "I profoundly regret the death of this various man," even if he had never in his life seen or heard of the defunct.

Representative and Senator-elect Blackburn, of Kentucky, was once stumping his district in company with his opponent. At one meeting he spoke first and charmed the audience by the manner rather than the matter of his remarks. Then the other man got up and turned the tide of popularity with a single sentence, in which he likened Mr. Blackburn to the swan, "that beautiful bird, which glides along, the perfection of grace, and dips and curves in lines of beauty—but only draws an inch or so of water!"

A bronze tablet has been placed upon the front of the new Pennsylvania National Bank Building, Philadelphia, Pa., bearing the inscription: "On this site originally stood the dwelling in which Thomas Jefferson drafted the Declaration of Independence which was adopted by the Continental Congress in this city, July 4, 1776. Erected, 1775; removed, 1883. The Ledger says that the question whether Jefferson drafted the document in the corner house or in the one adjoining on the west still is a matter of dispute, but as the bank building covers both lots the accuracy of the inscription on the tablet is not disputed.

The different kinds of dyewoods used in this country are logwood and fustic, from the West Indies; Lima, from the shores of the Pacific, and the bar and cam woods from Africa. The woods mentioned, with the exception of fustic, which is yellow, are red, but of various shades. The sapponia wood, which is a delicate pink, comes from the East Indies. The costs of the woods in the rough are, according to the Providence Journal, as follows: Logwood, from $20 to $25 a ton; the red woods, from $40 to $70 a ton, and the cam wood about $150 a ton. The latter wood comes from the interior of Africa, costs considerable for transportation, and is becoming scarce. Cam wood is used mostly by woolen manufacturers in making their dyes. This wood is drawn to the markets in Africa by slaves, and very frequently staples and chains are found attached to the logs when they arrive in this city, and poisonous insects of that clime are often found in the hollows of the wood, which are speedily killed.

Senator Philetus Sawyer, of Wisconsin, was "raised" in St. Lawrence county, New York, "bought his time" of his father, and started out for himself when 17 years old. He had in his belt $1,200 and $90 to pay his expenses on his way West. He wanted another dollar, and borrowed it of his brother. In a few years he began to accumulate. He made lucky speculations in timberlands, and his wealth increased. Recently he returned to his old home in St. Lawrence county, where he found his brother in straitened circumstances. Debt had got the best of him, and to satisfy a mortgage his home was about to be sold. "What is the amount?" asked Philetus. "Twelve hundred dollars," answered Philemon, with a face as long as the signal officer's report. "O, brace up," said the Wisconsin statesman; "I'll pay you what I owe you, which, with the interest, will be enough to straighten this matter out." "But," said the former, "you don't owe me anything." "Yes, I do replied Sorry. You remember lending me $1 when I went West; well here it is with returns," and he counted out $1,500. "Every dollar I took away with me has brought me $1,500 in return. If you ever get hard up let me know, and I'll help you out again."

About Reptiles.

Reptiles are at present a small and dying race. They have seen their best days. But in the great secondary age, as Tennyson graphically puts it, "A monstrous eft was lord of all the land and master of earth." At the beginning of that time the mammals had not been developed at all, and even at its close they were but a feeble folk, represented only by weak creatures like the smaller pouched animals of Australia and Tasmania. Accordingly, during the secondary period the reptiles had things everywhere pretty much their own way, ruling over the earth as absolutely as man and the mammals do now. Like all dominant types for the time being, they split up into many and various forms. In the sea, they became huge pudding-shaped monsters; on the dry land, they became great dinosaurians; in the air, they became terribly flying pterodactyls. For a vast epoch they inherited the earth; and then at last they began to fall, in competition with their own more developed descendants, the birds and mammals. One by one they died out before the face of the younger fauna, until at last only a few crocodiles and alligators, a few great snakes, and a few big turtles remain among the weak skulking lizards and geckos to remind us of the enormous reptilian types that crowded the surface of the lesser oceans.

Long before the actual arrival of true birds upon the scene, however, sundry branches of the reptilian class had been gradually approximating to and foreshadowing the future flying things. Indeed one may say that at an early period the central reptilian stock, consisting of the long, slim four-legged forms like the lizards, still closely allied in shape to their primitive newt-like and eel-like ancestors, began to divide laterally into sundry important branches. Some of them lost their limbs and became serpents; others acquired bony body-coverings and became turtles; but the vast majority went off in one of two directions, either as lizard-like Dinosaurians.—Popular Science Monthly for March.

Judge Cadaver Off on a Tear.

Judge Cadaver will please step this way," said Reuben Gardner, as he motioned to Samuel Sibley to raise the sash window and let out the odor of burning leather.

The judge came forward with a pressure of 200 pounds to the square inch, and the President was heard:

"Judge Cadaver, a society at Defiance, Ohio, known as 'De Aggregation of Pollosophy an' Science,' has requested me to send 'em down some member ob dis club who kin deliber a lecture' full of interest an' instruckshun. I has selected you. Heah am eight dollars in cash an' a railroad pass, an' you will leave heah to-morrow afternoon."

The Judge looked so multingly sweet that everybody began to grin.

"I now skeered to spoke a few remarks to you," said the president, as he laid aside his spectacles. "You are gwine among strangers. You will meet wid managers an' landholders an' all oddor classes of man.'

"Doan' talk too much wid your mouf.

"Doan' tey to make anybody believe dat you am a millionaire.

"Doan' stop to bet on de string game or three-card monte.

"Doan' pretend you know what you doan' know an' neiver hear of.

"Doan' stop to argy religun wid infidels nor politicks wid a young man wot can't vote.

"I 'spose he calls you 'Kernel' you needn't stop to explain his mistake, but at de same time doan' hire any one to call you 'Professor.'

"If you lose your money by playin' poker when you am gone, come home by the nigh way an' say nuffin to nobody. If you am knocked down an' robbed, you kin telegraph us an' count on receiving 'bout 50 dollars in cash. Dat's all, Judge, an' you kin now resume yer seat."—Detroit Free Press.

"Turned The Tables."

Yesterday morning a gentleman of good standing went up to Hall's store for a cocktail and walked up to the counter, where the following conversation took place:

"Are you Mr. Hall or Hall?"

"I'm plain Schorge. I was me. You drinks? I got de best brandy, I am to tell you."

"Well, I want to warn you to not give my boy any more beer."

"Got your poy beer? I should yes pay all beer. You dinks I keeps saloon for poys and den I gif away? Vat vhat I mooks mein store?"

"I mean that you must not sell him any."

"Ugh! Sell him any. Dot poy an order dings. Vay, don'd his monies vas so good like anoder man's? Meppy him got gounderfeit monies, eh? I look me dot drawer in. Youngpoy pees here last night. Yah, here vas a gounderfeit dollar! I poy glad you told me dot. Gone my saloon on it! A fader vhat got a poy like dot vas wurster as der poy. Gone my saloon oud! I see you sooner neppy."

And the poor man was forced to leave without getting in a word of defense.—Kentucky State Journal.

The Doctor Would Call at Once.

"My daughter is not feeling at all well this morning, Dr. B——," said a West End lady, "and I think you had better see her."

"Nothing very serious, I hope," remarked the physician.

"I fancy not. She seems a little faint and depressed in spirits, that is all; but I thought it would be well for you to call upon her."

"Has she eaten anything that might have disagreed with her, do you think?"

"Oh, no. She received a letter through the mail this morning, inclosed in a lavender-colored envelope, sealed with red sealing-wax, which had taste has evidently shocked her nervous system somewhat."

"I had better see her at once," replied the physician, gravely.—Philadelphia Call.

How Watch Cases are Made.

The many great improvements introduced in the manufacture of the Jas. Boss' Gold Watch Case, have led to similar improvements in the making of silver cases.

Under the old methods, each part of a silver case was made of several pieces of metal soldered together, requiring a great amount of cutting and soldering, which softened the metal and gave it the pliability of lead rather than the elasticity of silver.

Under the improved methods, each part of the Keystone Silver Watch Case is made of one solid piece of metal hammered into shape. The advantages are readily apparent, for every one knows that hammering hardens the metal while soldering softens it.

To test the superiority of the Keystone Silver Watch Case, take one of 3 oz. weight, press it squarely in the center when closed, and it will not give, while a case of same weight of any other make will give enough to break the crystal. The Keystone Silver Watch Case is made only with silver cap and gold joints.

Send 3 cent stamp to Keystone Watch Case Factories, Philadelphia, Pa., for handsome Illustrated Pamphlet showing how James Boss' and Keystone Watch Cases are made.
