It has often been said that nothing save business success and money constitutes a claim to social recognition on this coast; but, as even with such illustrations of the fact as the Sharon trial before them, our Eastern friends can hardly understand how absolute said rule is here, we can hardly expect the following perfectly true incident to be believed out of our own state:

One night not long ago the daughter of one of our best citizens was awakened by a noise in her room, and, upon sitting up, discovered a man disguised in a black mask standing beside her bed and calmly contemplating her features by the aid of a bull's eye lantern.

"Don't be alarmed, miss," he said; "I haven't taken anything yet."

"Bless me!" said the girl; "I do believe it's a burglar."

"Of course it is," said the housebreaker, with an ungratifying smile, as he lit a cigarette. "And I am proud of it."

"What do you want?" demanded the young lady.

"Well, I did want to sample your jewelry case," said the robber, "but you looked so all-fired pretty lying there with your auburn hair—just my style—that I couldn't help waking you to see if you also had dark eyes. I'm terribly fond of light hair and dark eyes, myself."

"Well, I have," said the young lady, glancing at the mirror. "But I must look like a fright in this—this dress."

"On the contrary, white is very becoming to you," said the disciple of Jimmy Hope, tenderly. "By the way, are you engaged?"

"That's telling," said the girl.

"No, but are you—honest Injun?"

"Well, yes, I am—to a young lawyer; but I don't care for him so very much."

"He's poor, isn't he?"

"Oh, awfully."

"Exactly; I thought as much. Now, my dear girl, don't you know there is nothing in this love-in-a-cottage business? You don't wan't to peg along nursing babies in some stuffy back room for the next ten years, do you?"

"N-n-n-o," murmured the girl.

"Then why not let this fellow slide and take me? I'm pretty comfortably fixed. Business has been good this season, and our profits are large. Our firm is now running a tunnel under a Marysville bank, and I've got a fourth interest. Besides, I'm secretary of the Burglars' Protective Association. What d'yer say?"

"Couldn't we go abroad next summer?" asked the girl, thoughtfully.

"Why, certainly. I expect to have to. Just think over the matter, and I'll drop in some night later in the week. I know how to get in." And, shouldering his kit, the secretary stepped out of the window and went off to open a jewelry store for an engagement ring.

And the next day the young lawyer received back his letters and photograph.

Our girls know on which side their bread is buttered, and you can bet on it.

Flowers in Paris.

"Where do all the white lilacs come from?" I asked the nice old woman at the Madeleine flower market who has the contract to keep my vases filled throughout the winter. "I suppose you receive them from Nice or some other southern point."

"Not at all, monsieur," was her reply. "All these pretty flowers grow inside of Paris, where certain gardeners make a specialty of having lilacs in bloom all the year round. The trade is a new one, as it is only four years ago that the way of doing so was discovered. The heat of the sun is replaced by that of the greenhouse, and the plant, deceived by this fictitious temperature, blossoms forth in December just as though it was the month of May."

Then I learned that the gardeners who devote themselves to this branch of the trade are called chauffeurs de lilas (warmers of lilacs), and that there are only five of them in Paris, two at Montrogne and the others in the Quartier St. Fargeau. It is generally the Marly lilacs that are made use of. The plants are subjected to a temperature of 40 degrees centigrade day and night and in a fortnight are in flower, but strange to say, the plant will only give white flowers under this process. Naturally they are of a rich purple color. The Persian lilac is the only one that does not lose its color when thus forced to go contrary to the laws of nature. Another strange fact is that the hothouse lilacs are handsomer and more fragrant than those which bloom in the open air. The reason is that the gardeners are careful to destroy all the leaf buds, so that the whole sap of the plant flows to the flower buds.

The plants do not die from the violence of the process, but they are so seriously damaged that it takes them years to regain their strength that they have lost—years which must of course be spent in the open air and in ordinary soil—but their flowers are forever after white, the coloring principle seemingly having been destroyed forever. In point of fact, however, the chauffeurs de lilas do not take the trouble to replant the poor bushes that have suffered so much. Three years is far too long to wait for profitable return, so the plants when stripped of their flowers, are rooted up and cast to one side, and when dry are made use of as kindling wood. The five chauffeurs de lilas in Paris consume in this way something like 6,000 plants a year, which cost them one franc each at the nursery gardens. The flowers they produce yield them 2,000,000 francs. One-half of the crop goes to foreign countries [illegible] the other half is sold here at the [illegible] markets, where the small dealer [illegible] their stock every day.—Paris [illegible] Francisco Chronicle.

Something Left.

[illegible] dee e years ago one of the gun[illegible]s in the river and harbor [illegible]ssa of $15,000 for im[illegible] Creek, Habana. The [illegible] engineer for that district [illegible] finding the said creek the [illegible] after a search of twenty-six [illegible] He found a rivulet three [illegible]ng, six inches deep, and three [illegible]de, and on the banks he found [illegible]olitary settler.

"The government has appropriated $15,000 to improve this creek," observed the engineer.

"I know it, and I've been waiting," was the reply.

"I don't see what improvement is needed or can be made."

"Reckon not, being as you are a stranger, but this 'ere cash was appropriated to shovel down this 'ere bank so that my old mule could git down to water without breaking his infernal back."

The improvement of Goose Creek was made at a cost of $3, and the engineer will either have to turn the current up stream or send the rest of the [illegible] back to the Treasury.

Bogus Art Genuine Butter.

Dr. Charles M. Cresson, the well known scientist, says there are many vegetable matters which are harmless that could be used in tinting oleomargarine, butterine and suerine, so as to be able to distinguish them from genuine butter. He mentioned that the coloring matter derived from the alkanet root was entirely harmless, and if used in coloring artificial butter in the same proportion that annatto is used to color genuine butter, would give it a delicate pink hue. Water street commission men generally favor some method to distinguish the "bogus" from the good.

Three-fourths of the butter now sold in Philadelphia is artificial. Some of the stuff is only one half butter, the remainder being common lard. In many cases the composition is simply beef fat, chemically treated, with no more genuine butter in it than is contained in axle-grease. "The way in which oleomargarine, butterine, and all artificial butters are sold," said President Macdonald, of the National Butter, Cheese and Egg Association, "is an outrage upon the consumers and the dairy interests of the country. The imitations are sold to the butter dealers and grocers at from 16 to 25 cents a pound, and they buy knowing exactly what it is. Their customers are not so fortunate. I do not know of a retail dealer in this city who does not sell the artificial article as the genuine product of the cow. What effect would it have to compel the manufacturers to distinguish the artificial from the genuine, by making the former a pink color? Why, it would simply kill the business. Who would buy pink butter? Not even the boldest boarding house keeper. It is ridiculous to talk about butterine keeping down the price of good butter. The bogus is foisted upon the consumer at twice its value, and, in addition, the buyer is deceived as to the stuff purchased. Philadelphia housewives have always been prejudiced in favor of the print rolls. That makes this city a good field for the artificial article, which is printed nicely. A majority of it comes from Chicago, though New York furnishes a fair supply. If Governor Cleveland signs the bill now in his hands, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of imitation butter, the industry will be killed in that state." President Macdonald suggested that it would be an excellent thing for butter buyers to ask the seller if the butter was genuine. If the answer was given in a hesitating sort of a way the customer should not buy. In a short time, he thought, the dealer would be brought to a realizing sense that he was swindling his patrons.

A visit to several butter commission houses on Water street developed the information that to change the color of the artificial article would result in a death-blow to its manufacture. One of the largest dealers said if it were tinted differently from the genuine he would rescind all his standing orders. He would not have a pound of pink oleomargarine in his place only at manufacturers' risk. Almost 75 per cent. of his sales consist of the butterines. Thousands of families are supplied with fancy rolls of apparently fresh butter, for which they pay big prices, under the impression that it is the genuine article. Three families out of four do not get what they expect, and none are the wiser for the experience. The big profit in selling butterine and like compounds are a temptation to the groceryman, and he sacrifices his honesty to make money.—Ph'a Inquirer.

A New Disease.

Among the curious maladies which advancing civilization seems destine to bring in its train not the least remarkable is that on which Parisian doctors are bestowing a good deal of attention just now—the obliquity of mind which has been called pour des espaces. The sufferer is usually a man in apparently good health, and is affected with no premonitory symptoms, although, on the other hand, there are cases where the malady results from other diseases, and is introduced by a feeling of weakness and sickness. It generally comes on suddenly, when the patient arrives at a particular place or is brought into the presence of a particular person. He then is observed to be in mortal terror without any apparent cause. The earth seems to him to open into a chasm before his feet, or he finds himself isolated by an immense and impenetrable space from the rest of the world. If he is on the pavement he dare not for his life step onto the roadbed, but stands stock still to be jeered at by the street boys. If he is on a step, he is afraid to move up or down for fear of being dashed to pieces in some imaginary abyss. All this time he keeps his wits—or, at least, a great many of them—about him, and is sensible of his absurd position. Sometimes he has enough sense to avoid places where the attack has come on before, or seems likely to do so again. Another peculiarity is that most of the sufferers belong to the liberal professions, and to the higher ranks of society. By examination into a considerable number of cases in the hospitals, it was found that men more often suffer than women, in a proportion of about four to one.—London Globe.

"Every man is the architect of his own fortune," remarked a prosperous man to his friend. "Yes," was the reply; "the architect's plans are always beautifully drawn, but what miserable failures some men make in building after them."

Explorer Stanley is thus photographed by a traveler who recently encountered him on the Congo: "Here he was, seated on his camp-chair, his pipe in his mouth and a semi-circle of grinning kinglets squatting in front of him, some of them smoking long-stemmed, little-bowled pipes in complacent silence, and others putting many questions as to his recent journey to Europe, and receiving his replies with expressions of incredulous wonder, tapping their open mouths with their hands. Stanley sat benignly chatting and smoking, his face lighting up with amusement at their naive remarks, while the bearing of his head still retained that somewhat proud carriage which inspired these African chieftains with a real respect for his wishes and a desire to retain his friendship."

He Wanted a Chance.

Husband—"Do you know, my dear, that the men would be happier if the women would follow some of the customs of the Japanese?"

Wife—"Why you horrid thing! You wouldn't want me to blacken my teeth, would you?"

Husband—"No; but there is one thing the Japanese women do which, if you followed might give me a chance to look in the mirror occasionally."

Wife—"What on earth can that be?"

Husband—"They dress their hair only once in four days, darling."—New York Journal.

How Watch Cases are Made.

The many great improvements introduced in the manufacture of the Jas. Boss' Gold Watch Case, have led to similar improvements in the making of silver cases.

Under the old methods, each part of a silver case was made of several pieces of metal soldered together, requiring a great amount of cutting and soldering, which softened the metal and gave it the pliability of lead rather than the elasticity of silver.

Under the improved methods, each part of the Keystone Silver Watch Case is made of one solid piece of metal hammered into shape. The advantages are readily apparent, for every one knows that hammering hardens the metal while soldering softens it.

To test the superiority of the Keystone Silver Watch Case, take one of 3 oz. weight, press it squarely in the center when closed, and it will not give, while a case of same weight of any other make will give enough to break the crystal. The Keystone Silver Watch Case is made only with silver cap and gold joints.

Send 3 cent stamp to Keystone Watch Case Factories, Philadelphia, Pa., for handsome Illustrated Pamphlet showing how James Boss' and Keystone Watch Cases are made.

Sure Thing! Sure Thing!

For the speedy and permanent cure of Diarrhea, Dysentary, Colic, Choler, Cholera Morbus, and the Summer Complaint of Children Teething.

Purely vegetable in its composition. We can heartily recommend it for its speedy and decided effects in even the worst cases, curing without restless and soothing and healing as it cures. It never fails I feel confident in affirming that no one has produced a remedy which can equal this Cordial Elixir in the nunber and excellence of its points. It is so palatable and pleasant to the taste that it subdues instead of producing nausea, rendering it very effective with children. For Sale by G. M. Shindel, Middleburgh, Pa.
