How Watch Cases are Made
The many great improvements introduced in the manufacture of the Jan. Ross' Watch Case, have led to similar improvements in the making of silver cases.
Under the old method, each part of a silver case was made of separate pieces of metal soldered together, requiring a great amount of cutting and soldering, which weakened the metal and gave it the liability of lead rather than the elasticity of silver.
Under the improved method, each part of the Keystone Silver Watch Case is made of one solid piece of metal hammered into shape. The advantages are readily apparent, for every one knows that hammering hardens the metal while soldering softens it.
To test the superiority of the Keystone Silver Watch Case, take one of 3 oz. weight, press it squarely in the center when closed, and it will not give, while a case of same weight of any other make will give enough to break the crystal. The Keystone Silver Watch Case is made only with silver cap and gold joints.

General Houston replied in a note of characteristic brevity: "If the people of Austin do not send them I shall come and get them, and if Colonel Morton can kill me, he is welcome to my corpse." The general was at once satisfied, and the patrolmen were placed on the roads, and a select committee went into permanent session in the city hall. During a sitting of that body, one who was unmannered and wholly stood in their midst having gained entrance by means of a tall avoak which grew against the window, his garb and arms were those of a hunter, and being spoken to by Colonel Morton, he placed his finger on his lips and remained silent. Colonel Morton flew into a rage and seized him, when the stranger drew his bow-knife at the same instant that Norton's friends held him back.
Another member of the body spoke to the stranger, saying that the meeting was a private one and that he presumed the gentleman had mistaken the house. At this he walked to the table and wrote one line, "I am deaf." Judge Webb, then wrote: "Tell me your business," when a letter was handed him, addressed to the citizens of Austin, which the judge read aloud as follows: Follow citizens! Though in error, and deceived by the acts of traitors, I will give you three days more to decide whether or not you will forward to me the archives.
At the end of that time you will please let me know your decision.
Sam Houston. The deaf man waited a few moments for a reply, and was about to leave, when Col.
Morton handed him a note, saying:
"You were brave enough to insult me; are you brave enough to give me the satisfaction?" The note wrote: "I am at your service," and after filing terms he left by the window.
Morton was told he would be killed as he was to fight Deaf Smith, who never moved his lips, but he could not be shaken in his resolve. The weapons used were rifles, the distance was a hundred paces, and the time sunset. A vast crowd saw the deed, Morton was dressed in broad cloth, his antagonist in smoke-tinted buckskin. Both were cool and stern. At the given signal both fired at the same instant; Morton sprang into the air and fell dead, a ball in his heart. Deaf Smith quickly reloaded his rifle and walked into the forest. Three days afterward he came with General Houston and ten others to Austin and the archives were removed without further opposition.
While President of the republic, Houston received a challenge to fight a duel, sent by a man whom he regarded as greatly his inferior socially. Turning to the bearer of the challenge he exclaimed, in a voice full of indignation: "Tell your principal that Sam Houston never fights down hill."
It was his custom to deliver his message to the Texan Congress orally.
A few days before one of his in-augurals a member of Congress said to the President that the body would be better pleased if he would prepare written messages; that it would be treating them more respectfully to write them out, and besides, they could then be preserved for future reference. Accordingly, on the day fixed for the inauguration he appeared with a roll of paper in his hand, and with a blue ribbon and marked in large letters, "Inaugural." He addressed them with the roll in his hand waving it gracefully, that all might see it and, concluding with a polite bow, handed it to the clerk and walked out of the chamber. When opened it proved only blank paper.
