UNITED.

The ship had fall'n to the ocean's

And never would walk the wide sen And crew and cargo and streamers

Beneath the feet of the billows lay.

And down to the pale unshrouded By many a fathom the diver sped ;

He hailed the abject, shivering wreck : deck.

He peered in many an unbarred room.

Where jewels burned in the deathly gloom, And corses sadly slumbering lay, Or swam together as if in play.

And some had the grace of gallant

And some were marred by a mortal But all looked strange, in the dim sea

As men who have lost their way at night. He flitted through that slumbering host: He was the daylight's wandering ghost,

Come down from a heaven where sunbeams play, To where dim dusk is the only day.

But who is this with the features And hand that is stretching forth to him ? God comfort his soul and give It

It is the brother he loves the best ! The brother who soothed his childish

Now stares at him with a cruel gaze Now looks at him with unseeing eyes; Now crushes his heart with a mad surprise.

He tore the armor of life away-He kissed the senseless lips of gray ; pair :

Two quarrelling brothers found them there.
