CLEVELAND AND THURMAN.

The Democratic National Convention which met at St. Louis this week, nominated Grover Cleveland for President, and Allen G. Thurman of Ohio, for Vice President.

A new and mysterious horse disease appeared in the lower part of the state of Indiana. The animals begin trembling, their limbs quiver, their bodies swell up, and death is sudden. The disease is spreading and no remedy has yet been discovered.

M'Camant Appointed.

Chief Clerk Thomas B. M'Camant, of the Auditor General's Office, has been appointed by Gov.

About Trespassing.

There are many persons who imagine they can cross a field or enter an orchard, fish in a stream which is the property of another, and do many things of this character which cannot be resisted by the owner of the land; that there is a popular idea that walking over a field is not to trespass. It possibly may not damage such property, but it is a misdemeanor to do it, which is punishable by law. The season is coming when people will be sauntering into the country. Such as do so, as well as all others, it will be safe for them to understand the law of trespass. Persons guilty of trespass are liable to a fine of not less than five nor more than fifty dollars. If a party convicted is too poor to pay the fine, he can be imprisoned one day for each dollar of the imposed penalty.

The Deadly Pistol.

What an important part in American life and death this deadly weapon is assuming. Every day, almost every hour, come various reports of accident, bloodshed, and death at the muzzle of the revolver and pistol, and it looks almost as though every man, and sometimes women, and even boys, carry this destructive implement as their constant companion, which they are ready to use with disastrous effect on the least provocation. Among the accounts that come to us in almost every daily paper are instances like the following: An old man living alone with his aged partner, who for many years has shared bravely his cares, joys, and sorrows, finding himself past work, no visible means of support, in a fit of despondency seizes the ever convenient pistol, and using it first on his wife then on himself, in a few moments ends both of their existences. The young man married perhaps for a year or two, comes home suddenly some day and finding his wife in the company of a stranger, in a mad fit of jealousy, without waiting for any explanation, reaches for his pocket companion, the terrible revolver, and in a short time all three are stretched lifeless. So we could continue did space allow, naming one instance after another of the terrible work of murder and self-destruction going on around us. The man in disgrace, the jealous lover the bungling accidentalist, the man whose dignity has been offended in some way or other, and those who have been insulted in some trivial manner, one and all fly to this method of redress, and their escapades generally and in the same way—terrible accident or death. There is hardly any instance of the foregoing where the perpetrators, had they but a few moments of cool reflection, would not have committed the deed; but having the means of destruction always ready to hand could not under the impulse of the moment resist the inclination to use it. Something ought surely be done to stay these murderous assaults on human life. More stringent laws should be enforced against all those carrying such weapons unnecessarily, the press generally has been doing its share in crying down this growing evil, but a more united and determined assault should be made, and the public and society as a whole should combine to discountenance and condemn this pernicious practice of constantly carrying such deadly and destructive weapons, which so often ends in these terrible and disastrous results.

GENERAL PHIL SHERIDAN.

The passage by the House of Representatives and the prompt signing by the President of the law reviving the office of general of the army in order that the dignity might be conferred on gallant Phil. Sheridan, was a graceful act that will receive a public approval as cordial as it will be universal. Any measure that can soften his pillow or cheer his heart now that he is engaged in a struggle with the common and invincible enemy, will be commended by the people of this country without regard to politics, race or religion.

Phil. Sheridan is an admirable man in many respects. A soldier whose achievements take rank with those of the illustrious soldiers of history, he was so modest and manly in health that the plainest citizen might see in his friendship. He was amiable while he was in the field, and he was as brave as he was in the heart. He was too brave to be treacherous, too generous to entertain malice, and if he yields in his last desperate fight, he will carry with him into the grave the kindly memories of the people.

Whether he is living or dead when these lines reach the public, the this Nation rejoices with all others that Congress and the President soothed his dying moments by so magnificent a testimony of appreciation of his priceless services to the country, and his exalted character as an officer and a man. He was essentially a soldier and whether in the saddle on the field of battle, or at the counsel table, he was wise, brave, generous and trustworthy. May he fully recover his health and live long to enjoy the honors which have been conferred on him.

CENTREVILLE NEWS.
