Getting a Living.

There are a great many ways of getting—I don't say earning, you will observe—a living. The following incident was related to me the other day by a friend, who vouched for it being strictly true. It is as follows:

One day last summer a poorly-dressed woman made her appearance at one of the swellest boarding-houses on Wabash avenue, and, telling a pitiful story of destitution and need, asked for the food scraps, the daily leavings of the table. As the boarding-house was one where the boarders did not tolerate warmed-over grub, and as the lady who kept it was a kind-hearted person, she told the woman to come each day and she would give her what she asked for. The woman humbled her thanks and departed. On the following day she made her appearance and was given a large basketful of food; and so for months she continued to come daily and always went away full-handed. But one day it so happened that when the kind-hearted landlady was filling her basket for her, the agent from whom she rented the house happened to call for the rent. He eyed the beggar woman keenly as she stood waiting for her basket to be filled, but said nothing until she had taken her departure. Then he turned to the lady of the house and said:

"Do you know that woman?"
"No," replied the landlady, "I do not know her name. But she is very poor and I have been giving her the leavings of my table for a long time. She seems to be very glad to get even that."
"Well," replied the agent, "I'll tell you something that, evidently, you don't know. That poor beggar woman is your landlady."
"My landlady!" echoed the woman in astonishment. "What do you mean?"
"Just what I say," coolly replied the agent. "She is your landlady; to put it plainly, she owns this property, and I, as her agent, turn over to her each month the rent which you pay to me for this house. She has two other pieces of property besides this, that I know of, and she and her husband are worth not less than thirty thousand dollars."

"Her husband!" exclaimed the now horrified boarding-house keeper. "I did not know she had a husband; she told me she had none."
"Quite likely," responded the agent, but I happened to know that she has a husband, and a big, strapping fellow he is, too. He is a section boss on the Altoona road and is getting good wages. They, I mean this woman and her husband, keep a boarding-house themselves, and that grub that you have so kindly been giving to her has gone a long ways toward feeding her own boarders, who, being only section hands on the railroad, are not, perhaps, so hard to please as are yours. But," concluded the agent, laughing, "having seen me here, I don't think she will trouble you any more." And he was right. She never showed up at that boarding-house again. —Arkansas Traveler.

Nothing More Could be Done.

President Lincoln had been during our most stormy weather to visit the camps of the Generals in Virginia, and taken a violent cold. Mrs. Lincoln was in despair, and one day said to Secretary Stanton, "I do wish you would lock Mr. Lincoln out of the rooms for a week! He is ill enough to be in bed now, and suffers agonies with his arm from acute rheumatism. I don't know what to do! He goes out, and keeps at work every moment."

Mr. Lincoln waved his long arm at the Secretary, saying, "Well, Stanton, there ought to be one comfort for my poor wife, anyhow—the same that the poor man Jefferson had, whose only son died. Did you ever hear the story?"

"His friends, family, neighbors, and church lamented, extolled and grieved over the loss, at the funeral, when Jefferson himself arose and said, My dear friends: We have the blessed consolation of knowing that everything was done that could be done. He was bled no less than twenty-four times in twenty-four hours! But he had no strength and had to die!"

"Now, I've been wrapped in no less than twenty-four pieces of red flannel and liniment since yesterday, and still my wife isn't satisfied." —M. S., in August Wide Awake.
