The Portuguese Government has complained to Prince Bismarck that Great Britain has violated the Berlin treaty by the policy pursued by that power in its dispute with Portugal. The latter country has asked that a conference of the powers be convoked to discuss the African question.

A JOKING SOLDIER. He Always Saw the Brightest Side

Everything.

Only this week I was reading Gen. Doubleday's story of Gettysburg, and the day before I had seen the old General on the street. His presence in New York and his book combine to recall to my mind a very practical joko that was played upon him at Gettys-burg by Capt. Joe Parker, of Gen. Hancock's staff. Col. Billy Wilson and Joe Parker were Gen. Hancock's pets. They were both young, full of mischief, and only saw the ludicrous side of everything, no matter how serious.

In the very white heat of the battle on Cemetery Hill on July 3, 1863, Gen. Hancock was severely wounded, and Capt. Parker immediately rode off to find Gen. Doubleday, who was the senior division commander, and put him in command of the Second Corps. He found Doubleday sitting under a big tree. He saluted him quickly and said :

"Gen. Doubleday, Gen. Hancock has been very seriously wounded, and you will

Just at that moment, before he had time to finish the sentence, "assume command of the corps," a shell burst directly over the General. The shock half stunned him, and he fell over, ex claiming:

"Oh, Lam killed! I am killed!"

Capt. Parker couldn't resist this opportunity for a joke, and he rode off rapidly in search of Gen. Gibbon. He found him, reported to him that Doubleday had been killed, Hancock had been wounded, and that he was to take command of the corps. The news spread rapidly that Doubleday was dead, and Capt. Parker so reported to Gen, Hancock. A few hours later a railroad train containing Hancock, his staff and a number of wounded officers was moving toward Baltimore. Haucock was lying on a stretcher, suffering intensely, but his mind and sympathy went out toward his division commanders and his other officers who were dead or wounded.

"It's too bad about Doubleday's death," said he to a wounded officer sitting near him, who was shot in the arm. "Doubleday isn't dead," replied the officer. "I saw him in command of the corps after you were wounded and two hours before I left the field." "Why, Joe Parker told me that he was killed," replied Hancock. Parker, who was in a front car with the boys having fun, was immediately summoned. He appeared before Hancock, who said :

"Capt. Parker, didn't you tell me that Gen. Doubleday was killed?'

"Certainly I did," replied Joe. "He told me he was, and what the devil was I to do but take his word for it?"

Despite the suffering in that car, there was a hearty laugh, and Parker went back to his companions. As he closed the car door, Hancock remarked:

"That boy will never see anything serious in the most serious things of 13.00this life.

Poor Joe Parker and his counterpart, Col. Wilson, are both dead, while the old General of whom Gen. Hancock told this amusing story walks along Broadway apparently as hearty and healthy as a man of fifty .- New York Star.
